FOSS'S DECLARATION OF WAR ON LODGE.

"I do not propose that Senator Henry Cabot Lodge or anyone else shall steal the senatorship. The office is not his property.

"I am not going to stand for these gum-shoe methods on the part of Senator Lodge, when he is trying to manipulate the Legislature to insure his own re-election. Before I would sign his credentials, if he by any mischance secured enough votes, I would make a personal canvass of the State, and myself would count every ballot cast, whether for or against Lodge.

"Unless he retires, I shall be in the executive chair but a few days before I begin my war against him, and it will be war to the knife." —Governor-elect Foss.

BRANDEIS WARS AGAINST RATES

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—The shippers side of the controversy waged over the general advance proposed in rates south from New England to the gulf and west to the Mississippi, was presented to-day to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The hearing was a continuation of that held by the commission a month ago when a number of railroad presidents advocated an increase in railroad rates, which if allowed to become effective, would net the Eastern railroad companies about $100,000,000 a year.

Attorney Louis D. Brandeis of Boston, representing a number of New England shippers, presented expert testimony concerning the reasons why the rates should not be advanced. A volume of statistical matter, relating to tariffs on both class and commodity rates from a given section to New York city and from the latter to Chicago, was placed in evidence for the purpose of making a comparison of rates.

Mr. Brandeis' Argument.

Following a general demand by attorneys representing a number of railroads for an extension of time in which to furnish information requested by the commission, Attorney Brandeis made his address to the commission. He said:

"The increases demanded by the railroads are not just or reasonable and no evidence had been adduced at prior hearings to substantiate such a demand."

He expected to show that the increases are neither justified nor legal. The horizontal increase in class rates, he added, "cast new burdens upon the consumer. It makes arbitrarily a sweeping change of long-distance rates and changes without evidence whether the existing rates are or are not amply compensatory."

Respecting the contention that railroads need additional net income, he said it was not necessary that the commission approve the particular tariffs now under consideration. If they need raises in rates, he said, it could be obtained through greater efficiency and economy.

Mr. Brandeis charged Wall street with preventing effective and economic operation of roads, and declared that where actual need of increases exists the burden should be borne by the stockholders through a reduction of dividends and not be squeezed out of the shippers or consumers.

"I propose to show," continued Mr. Brandeis, "by expert testimony, that through the scientific management of the economical side of operating railroads the roads could save $1,000,000 a day. We believe that reasonable proof has been presented that these rates should not be approved and that in any event not until this commission has made a further investigation on its own initiative."

Lost--Found

The fact that you have lost anything is very important to you, but of very little interest to the public generally.

The best way to interest the public is by inserting an advertisement in the "LOST & FOUND" column of the AMERICAN'S "classified want ad" department. Hundreds of lost articles are located every month by this modern method.

GIRLS FLEE IN DOWNTOWN FIRE

Six girls and twenty-four men, at work on the second and third floors of the three-story building No. 30 Kingston street, had a narrow escape at 8:30 a. m. to-day when a rush of flames and smoke from tubs of blazing rubber cement, into which a fellow-workmen had carelessly dropped a flaming match, sent them scurrying to the street.

Firemen had hard work to subdue the blaze which started in the workrooms of the Hub Raincoat Company, which occupies the second and third floors of the building. Six girls and fourteen men were at work on the third floor when the match, poorly aimed at a cuspidor, fell into the cement. In an instant there was a burst of flame and the employes fled for their lives down the stairs to the street.

Lewis Simmons, proprietor of the raincoat company, was in the cutting room of the second floor with ten workmen when the flames burst out on the floor above. They hardly had time to wonder at the cause of the tumult when the flames, spreading upward and downward, broke through the ceiling and Simmons and his men had to flee for their lives.

Two minutes after the fire started the interior of the building was a mass of flames and smoke. It burned fiercely in this compressed space then suddenly burst through the windows on the Kingston street front sending a blast of flame almost across the street and threatening the buildings on the opposite side. The plate glass windows on the ground floor were broken into thousands of pieces which showered upon spectators.

Jacob Bennett, a workman, attempted to extinguish the flames when they first burst from the tubs and was slightly burned. No one else in the building was injured.

The loss, which will be between $2,500 and $8,000, is confined principally to the raincoat concern. The artificial limb establishment of J. R. Palmenberg's Sons on the ground floor was damaged by smoke and water.

Miss Hattie Handler, bookkeeper for Simmons, seized as many of the books of the concern as she could when she heard the alarm and dashed them to the street amid a rain of broken glass from the windows above.

CARTER AS JUSTICE SURPRISES CAPITAL

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—The report from Montana that U. S. Senator Carter had been offered the seat on the bench of the Supreme Court caused by the resignation of Associate Justice William H. Moody, caused surprise here to-day. Justice Moody's resignation, which was a result of ill-health, became effective yesterday. It is not believed to be improbable that one place of the two that President Taft has to fill on the Supreme Court bench will go to a man from the Far West, but the name of Senator Carter has not been prominently mentioned hitherto.

CRIPPEN ADMITS GUILT?

LONDON, Nov. 21.—It was reported to-day that Dr. H. H. Crippen had confessed that he murdered his wife, Belle Elmore Crippen. The belief of those who circulated the report was based upon a long spiritual confession which the American made to his religious adviser.

Ethel Clare LeNeve visited Crippen in Pentonville prison to-day and their meeting was one of the most emotional and dramatic that has ever been enacted in the grim walls of the prison. The young woman for whose love Crippen was charged with killing his wife, wept and cried out hysterically as they talked.

The visit of Miss Leneve was her fourth since her acquittal of being an accessory after the fact in the murder of Belle Elmore Crippen, and it was also her last.

Girl is Still Faithful.

The girl wept hysterically through the interview and at times sobbed out: "Oh, Hawley, I believe you are innocent."

Crippen was deeply moved himself—more so the prison attendants say than at any time since his incarceration.

Home Secretary Winston Churchill to-day refused to take official action upon the petition which prayed a commutation of Dr. Crippen's sentence for the murder of his actress wife, Belle Elmore. Crippen will hang Wednesday.

In a three-column signed statement printed in the papers here Dr. Crippen says that he is not afraid to die, and bows to the inevitable.

The mystery of Belle Elmore's disappearance and the flight of Dr. Crippen with his typist, Miss LeNeve, forms one of the most thrilling tales of criminal history in England. Crippen had told the police that his wife had gone to America and had died in a Western town. For a time this story satisfied them, but when they later went to find him he had disappeared. A search of his home revealed the skeleton buried in quicklime.

Crippen was trailed to the steamship Montrose, bound for Montreal. His typist was dressed in boy's clothes. They were arrested and taken back to England, where Crippen was promptly found guilty of the murder of his wife and condemned to die.

Chief Inspector Dew, who had charge of the investigations in the Crippen case, has resigned. He was for more than twenty-eight years in the service, and had engaged in the detective branch twenty-four years.

When Crippen was informed of the Home Secretary's action, holding that they had had a fair trial and that the evidence was of proper nature, he said:

"I will soon be with my father."

W. A. GREEN, FORMER FIRE CHIEF, DEAD

William A. Green, eighty-seven years old, one of the most famous fire-fighters that ever served in the Boston Fire Department, and last of the old-line fire chiefs and officials, died early to-day in his home, No. 142 St. Botolph street. For forty years Mr. Green served in the department. He risked his life many times and was always in the thick of the fighting to save life and property.

Gradually he worked to the top of "the ladder," and in 1874 he was made chief of the department. During the next ten years he was the head of the firemen. In 1884 he was appointed fire commissioner. This office he held for three years and then, resigning, retired to private life.

Mr. Green was born in Clarendon, Vt., November 6, 1823. When a young man he removed to Boston and had made his home here since. The funeral will be held at the home Wednesday afternoon at 1 o'clock. Burial will be in Cohasset.

RESTELLI INQUEST SHOWS HIM SUICIDE

The last chapter was written to the story of the tragedy of Louis G. Restelli, who murdered Henry E. Hardwick and his mother, Mrs. Mary Ann Restelli, in Quincy, when Judge Albert E. Avery to-day made known his finding on the inquest held over Restelli's remains last week. Judge Avery stated that the evidence showed that Restelli had commited suicide by drowning. Restelli's body was found in a quarryhole on the outskirts of Quincy. At the time he committed the two murders he fired at and wounded three others, including one of his brothers.

SECRETARY KNOX IS PUT UP FOR SENATE

PITTSBURG, Nov. 21.—An attempt is being made by friends of Secretary P. C. Knox to have him come out in opposition to United States Senator Oliver for the Senate, and it is said that he will do so if it be shown that he has a chance to win. Mayor Magee, William Flinn and the entire Keystone party of Pennsylvania, all favor Knox.

100 KILLED IN BATTLE IN MEXICO

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—Major-General Leonard oWod, chief of staff, U. S. A., to-day telegraphed Brigadier-General Ralph W. Hoyt, commanding the Department of Texas, with headquarters at Fort Sam Houston, to hold his forces in readiness to act in conjunction with Governor Campbell of Texas should he find it necessary to use United States troops to ensure neutrality on the border.

City of Mexico dispatches say that President Diaz called a special meeting of the cabinet to-day. It is understood that plans were discussed for the immediate enlargement of the Mexican army.

Seven thousand Mexicans, many of them armed and equipped with horses, have crossed the Rio Grande into Mexico and are racing with government troops toward a secret rendezvous in the mountains, according to advices to-day from El Paso.

It is evident that the revolution is well organized, that funds are not lacking and that a strong army can be put into the field against President Diaz. The thousands who have crossed from Texas joined forces with revolutionists in the northern provinces.

Arms Being Distributed.

From Mexico City and other points in the republic it was reported to-day that great quantities of arms are being distributed among the rebels in the north.

Mexican revolutionists need expect no favors from the U. S. government. President Diaz has the moral support of this government, and if necessary, U. S. soldiers will clear the Mexican border of all revolutionists. This is the attitude of the United States as outlined to-day by State Department officials.

The neutrality treaty with Mexico is to be rigidly enforced. All Mexicans who attempt to incite disorder, and who are operating on the Texas side of the border are to be rounded up and arrested as speedily as the secret service agents of the United States can operate. Mexicans who attempt to cross the border into Mexico to support or foment any armed revolution, are to be treated as outlaws.

To Act With Regular Army.

The State authorities of Texas are now handling the border situation. The moment it becomes apparent that the Texas authorities are unable to cope with the situation the United States Government, it is said, will act with the regular army. No orders have yet been issued to strengthen the border garrisons by the department, and such orders are not likely, as War Department officials to-day said there are sufficient regulars in Texas and Arizona to successfully meet any situation that may arise. In Texas there are two regiments of infantry, three batteries of field artillery and ten troops of cavalry. They are distributed at Fort Clark, Fort McIntosh, Fort Bliss and Fort Sam Houston. In Arizona there is a battalion of infantry at Whipple barracks and two troops of cavalry at Fort Huachuca.

The latest dispatch from Ambassador Wilson at Mexico City, filed Saturday night, reached the State Department to-day. He reports that the Government has informed him that the revolutionary outbreaks took place at Puebla and Juarez on Friday; that there are no other disturbances and the Government has the situation well in hand. He adds that the newspaper El Pais continues to publish violent and incendiary articles and will be surpressed.

Martial Law Imminent.

To-day's unofficial dispatches from Mexico City say that the situation warrants the belief that martial law will be proclaimed throughout the republic within forty-eight hours.

A battle has been fought at Zacatecas in the interior, and according to reports reaching here, at least 100 were killed when soldiers fired into a body of revolutionists. Some estimates place the loss of life as high as 500, but these are believed to be wildly exaggerated. Rumors are current of conflicts along the border. Martial law is in force at Guerrero and riots are said to have taken place.

Special orders were issued to-day for the capture for Madeiro, the revolutionary leader. The sensational revelation, that followers of Madeiro have tampered with the Mexican standing army and extracted promises of desertion from a number of the officers was made to-day by wholesale military arrests. These arrests made at the direction of President Diaz include captains, colonels and several lieutenant colonels.

More than forty army officers and enlisted men have been placed under arrest and will be tried by court martial for treason. The extent of the army plot is not known, but it was reported to-day that more arrests would follow. The Mexican fighting force is not at its best now, the country being able to muster only 26,000 men for internal service. The revolutionists cleverly bided their time until they could take the government at a disadvantage.

It is believed that Madeiro managed to leave the United States and cross the Rio Grande into Mexico unknown to the authorities. It is estimated that the rebel force at present does not number more than 5,000 although hundreds of Mexicans, all armed, are continually crossing the country from Texas.

FOSS DEMANDS LODGE QUIT FIGHT FOR SENATE

Coming Down.

Governor-Elect Proposes to Go Before People in Order to Drive Senator Out.

Governor-elect Foss declared to-day that he proposed to see to it that Senator Lodge should not steal the senatorship in Massachusetts this year, and that if Mr. Lodge does not get out of the fight he, as Governor, will go personally into every part of the State and make a fight to defeat Lodge.

Mr. Foss declared that he would go into each city and town that stood by Lodge, address meetings and call upon those who were for Lodge to stand up and be counted, so that the people of the State should know just who were for him and against him.

Contemplating this aggressive, determined stand taken by the Governor, Lodge politicians reflected to-day that it was Lodge who virtually forced Foss out of the Republican party. Now Foss proposes to read Lodge out of political life.

No Gumshoe Method Allowed.

"I do not propose," said Governor-elect Foss to-day with great emphasis, "that Senator Henry Cabot Lodge or any one else shall steal the senatorship. The office is not his property. But he'll try to steal it if he can't get it any other way.

"I am not going to stand for these gumshoe methods on the part of Senator Lodge, when he is trying to manipulate the Legislature to insure his own re-election.

"Before I would sign his credentials if he by any mischance secured enough votes, I would make a personal canvass of the State and myself would count every ballot cast, whether for or against Lodge. But I could predict now that the popular vote would be a landslide against Lodge.

"Unless he retires, I shall be in the executive chair but a few days before I begin my war against him, and it will be war to the knife. Lodge must be defeated at any cost. If the Legislature doesn't retire him, a State wide protest certainly will.

A Trustee for the People.

"When the people elected me governor, they chose me to be the guardian of their interests, and on behalf of the people of Massachusetts, I am not going to see the senatorship stolen. I don't intend that one iota of the property of the voters of this State shall be pilfered, and this senatorship is their property. It doesn't belong to Senator Lodge, although he may think it does. But he is mistaken.

"To prevent his serving another term as senator representing the people of this commonwealth at Washington, I shall take the stump myself. If it ever comes to a question of having to signing his credentials, I would go into every meeting hall in the State. Everywhere that men are accustomed to gather together would hear my call against Lodge. I would lay the issue before the people, in plain language. I would ask them to stand. The vote would be counted, and I would do it myself if I had to. In this way, I believe we would show that the anti-Lodge sentiment is so strong that not even a Republican Legislature would support him.

"Lodge must be put out. If he won't get out, I demand his unconditional surrender. If he doesn't surrender, he must fight. He must be retired to private life.

"There is but one issue in this fight I am making. That is, Lodge."

FINAL FIGHT TO SAVE KELIHER

The final fight to save William J. (Billy) Keliher for alleged complicity in the looting of the Cambridge City Bank is to be made on the ground that the testimony of George W. Coleman, the chief witness against him, was that of a felon, convicted of the crime of looting the bank.

This was brought out this afternoon when Lawyers Daniel H. Coakley and Harvey H. Pratt, attorneys for Keliher, filed a new draft of their bill of exceptions taken at the Keliher trial, with the United States Circuit Court.

The lawyer for Keliher, in order to facilitate the progress of the case, adopted suggestions made by the government in connection with their original exceptions. The new draft of exceptions taken consists of more than 100 typewritten pages which include the whole of Judge Hale's charge to the jury, to which the Keliher lawyers object.

Judge Hale will first look over this new draft of exceptions. If he approves it and there is a belief that he may because of the technical concessions made by the lawyers for Keliher then the case goes to the United States Court of Appeals, which sits in the Federal Building in Boston in January, and Keliher will have his rights passed upon by three judges.

Judge Colt of the United States District Court to-day denied the motion of former Governor John L. Bates, the receiver of the National City Bank of Cambridge, who sought to have the property of Edwin Dresser and certain trustees of the bank attached for the losses sustained by the defalcations of Coleman. Dresser was the president of the concern when Coleman looted it. The denial of Receiver Bate's motion was because it had not been brought in the right court.

WELLMAN GUEST OF HONOR AT BANQUET

Walter Wellman and Manville Vaniman, engineer of Wellman's trans-Atlantic expedition, will be the guests of honor at the annual banquet of the Aero Club of New England to-night at the Hotel Somerset, in celebration of the 127th anniversary of the first balloon ascension. One of the matters up for discussion at the banquet is the proposed transcontinental balloon flight which P. Chester Thompson, a New York mining engineer has offered to finance to the extent of $10,000.

CASE OF CHOLERA IS FOUND IN QUEBEC

QUEBEC, Nov. 21.—A suspicious case of illness, which was brought here a week ago by Peter Spencer, a passenger on the steamer Royal George was to-day pronounced cholera by Dr. Adami of McGill University.

DEER HUNTERS HAVE BIG DAY

An army of hunters started out in the five western counties of the State at sunrise to-day, when the law went off deer for one week. This is the first "open" season on deer in Massachusetts for twelve years. During that time deer have been so protected that the five counties now "open" constitute one of the finest deer preserves in the east.

Toward noon reports of successful deer hunting were telephoned into the BOSTON AMERICAN from all the "open" district.

The first deer, so far as now known, is credited to [illegible] H. Willscroft of West Brimfield, who shot a 200-pound buck at 6:22 a. m., only one hundred yards from West Brimfield railroad station.

Bagged on Blodgett Farm.

At 6:30 a Mr. Forte of Springfield shot a doe on the Blodgett Farm in West Brimfield. The Blodgett Farm is one mile east of West Brimfield railroad station.

At 7:30 L. K. Phillips of Atlantic, a Boston & Albany Railway mail clerk, shot a big buck on the Blodgett Farm.

The way deer have been invading city and town streets is shown by the fact that the three deer killed in West Brimfield were all brought down within one mile of the railroad station.

From Franklin County came report of seven deer killed up to noon time, as follows:

Fred Mollenbrey of Turners Falls killed a 150-pound buck in Montague at 7 a. m. Philip Caney shot a doe in Montague and William Lapean shot another doe in the same town. James McClellan shot a doe on his East Deerfield farm. Robert and Bruno Hartmann each shot a buck on Pelly's Plain, Greenfield. Charles A. Franklin, Boston & Albany mail clerk, shot a buck in Greenfield.

One of the biggest quarries reported was a 350-pound buck which fell to Leo Power of Dalton on North Mountain, Pittsfield Township. Power, who is head laster at Mill's shoe factory, Pittsfield, killed the big buck at 9 o'clock.

A. G. Purrington and Charles B. Daniels of Worcester shot a buck at 7 a. m. in Paxton township.

A Week of Sport.

The five counties in which the law is off on deer for one week are Worcester, Hampshire, Franklin and Berkshire. Deer slaying is allowed till sunset next Saturday. Only one deer is allowed for each hunter. The only weapon which may legally be used is a shotgun. Use of dogs is forbidden.

The shotgun requirement is to prevent the use of high-powered rifles and the consequent danger to other people, including hunters. In spite of this precaution, much alarm is felt through the five counties in question, because the entire district is overridden with hunters. In the town of Palmer alone, for instance, 230 hunting licenses have been taken out.

LODGE REFUSES TO REPLY TO ALL ATTACKS BY FOSS

Senator Lodge was seen by a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter at the Hotel Touraine to-day. The Senator seemed to be in his usual health, and his manner appeared to be as suave and debonair as ever.

"Have you read the statement of Governor-elect Foss?" he was asked.

"I have," the Senator replied.

"Will you make a statement in reply, Senator?"

"No, I have nothing to say at all for the papers at this time, and I may not say anything at all."

"Will you say whether or not you will continue in the fight, or will withdraw?"

"If I have any statement I shall make it a general one to the press, perhaps to-morrow morning," concluded Senator Lodge.

Senator W. Murray Crane will arrive in Boston to-night to help Senator Lodge in his fight for re-election. It is generally understood that it is not because Senator Crane loves Lodge so much he has consented to help him, but his offer of assistance is said to be due to h' fear that if Lodge is beaten it will result in the progressive Republicans plucking up courage to defeat Crane later on.

MRS. SCHENK IS ARRAIGNED

WHEELING, W. Va., Nov. 21.—Mrs Laura Farnsworth Schenk, under indictment for the attempted murder of her husband, the millionaire packer, was arraigned in the Ohio County Court to-day. The courtroom was filled to its capacity, the aisles being crowded, and the eyes of all the spectators dwelt upon the woman as she took her place in the dock with a number of prisoners accused of disorderly conduct, petty theft and minor offences.

Mrs. Schenk was accompanied by her lawyers, O'Brien and Boyce. As she enter through a small door leading from the county jail the hum in the court ceased.

Although her features were slightly drawn her step was firm and she paid no heed to the vast throng that had gathered. Mrs. Schenk had been in conference with her attorneys for several hours and had evidently been preparing for the ordeal of facing the public. After entering the court room, she talked briefly with her attorneys and when her case was called Attorney O'Brien answered instead of the accused.

Mr. O'Brien filed notice before the court, no objection being taken by Prosecutor Handlan, that it had been decided to file special pleas to each of the five counts in the indictment. This notice showed that Mrs. Schenk will make a hard legal fight for liberty. Attorney O'Brien then announced that the defence would ask for a trial to be set for December 19. The special pleas will be entered on Wednesday of this week at which time the defendant will again be required to appear in court.

The date asked for trial will be argued after the pleas have been entered, but it is learned that Prosecutor Handlan will offer no objection to that date being set.

Mrs. Schneck was clothed very plainly, wearing light colored hat trimmed with only ribbon and a plain blue suit and one little diamond being her only jewel.

ENGRAVERS' CONTEMPT CASE IS POSTPONED

The contempt proceedings against the officers of the Photo Engravers' Union scheduled to come before Judge Pierce in the Suffolk Superior Court to-day, were postponed a week through arrangement between Judge Pierce and William H. Noble, counsel for the master engravers. Mr. Noble wishes time to obtain a deposition from Louis A. Schwartz of Philadelphia, international treasurer of the Photo Engravers' Union. Mr. Nobel seeks to show that strike payments are being kept up, indicating that the officers of the union are continuing the strike and thus violating the injunction. The strike and the legal proceedings resulting have become a celebrated cause on account of a letter received by Judge Richardson of the Superior Court and containing a death threat if he punished the four union officers before the court in contempt proceedings. The union officers and men vigorously disclaim and responsibility for the letter.

25 SPITTERS IN COURT TODAY

Twenty-five violators of the spitting ordinance had been brought before the courts at noon to-day. Twenty of them appeared in the central Municipal Court, and five of them were before Judge Fallon in the South Boston Court.

Of the five who appeared before Judge Fallon four were fined $3 and one had his case placed on file. The last named case was that of Patrick J. Mahoney of South Boston. He told Judge Fallon that a fine would be a hardship to him. Judge Fallon ordered his case placed on file. The four who paid $3 fines were Hugh Lockhart, Andrew Bummins, John Waters and Peter Beaty. All of these were offenders in South Boston. Two of them were apprehended Saturday and the other two yesterday. No arrests were made, the men being summoned into court to-day.

HIT WELLS FARGO RATES.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—A complaint was filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission to-day against Wells Fargo & Co., alleging discriminatory express rates between stations in Arizona.

WHITE CAT IN FENWAY PALACE

Mrs. "Jack" Gardner had her first chance to-day to become friends with Buster, the beautiful Angora cat purchased from Mrs. Winnie Dolan of Brockton. Buster is the first cat ever allowed inside the limits of the palatial Fenway residence of Mrs. Gardner.

Buster made his debut in the Venetian Palace on Saturday, but his mistress didn't have a chance to see him, as she was in New Haven to watch the nothing to nothing game between Harvard and Yale. But to-day the handsome feline was introduced to Mrs. Gardner, and it wasn't long before they became fast friends.

According to the servants, Buster is well worthy a place in the luxurious Gardner household. In the first place he is spotlessly white. Moreover, he is one of the best dispositioned cats to be found anywhere. In reality, Buster is but a kitten, but despite his youth, he has fallen right in with the routine of life in the Fenway mansion, and loved his mistress at first sight, as the servants could tell by his purring.

Mrs. Dolan, the Brockton woman who sold Buster to Mrs Gardner, thought the kitten was a prize winner for beauty, and that impelled her to write Mrs. Gardner, enclosing a picture of the Angora cat. Mrs. Gardner was so pleased with Buster's appearance, that when she left for New Haven she left word that the cat should be accepted and paid for when brought to her Fenway home.

MAYOR URGES TAX ON UNEARNED INCREMENT

As a means of handling expense caused by the constantly increasing population of large cities, Mayor Fitzgerald, in an address at the people's forum in All Souls' Church, Braintree, declares "taxation of unearned increment" necessary. The Mayor declared the present system of taxation in Boston is unjust because, on account of the restricted business district land values increase over night. With this system, he said, it would be possible to do away with the "anomaly of freight yards right in the heart of the city."

FOSS WILL SPEAK AT "1915" RALLY

The final meeting of the Boston—1915 Civic Advance Campaign will be held in Tremont Temple at 8 p. m. to-day. Governor-elect Foss will be among the speakers who will boom the "Altogether for Boston" idea, which is the general subject of the rally. Michael J. Splaine, Rabbi Wise of the Free Synagogue, New York, and President Charles F. Thwing of Western Reserve University and Adelbert College, Cleveland, will also speak. Thomas B. Fitzpatrick will preside.

HUNDREDS ATTEND CHILDREN'S MISSION

St. Joseph's Church of Somerville was the scene of one of the largest children's missions ever held in this section. Hundreds of children received a blessing from the missionary father. The mission was the closing of one of a series that has extended through a period of four weeks. It is estimated that from 23,000 to 24,000 communions have been received during the past few weeks.

Italian Cities Cut Off by Big Storm.

VENICE—All communication with the cities of Tolmezzo and St. Pietro, in the province of Venetia, was cut off to-day as a result of the great storms sweeping that section, and it was feared that they were inundated with vast damage and loss of life. Word brought from the Carnia district stated that the rivers of Zeglia, Tagliamento and Piave were out of their banks and that rain was falling in torrents. Tolmezzo and St. Pietro have been isolated. The raging torrents and the high winds have blown down telegraph wires. The storm belt is southeast of the Carnic Alps.

Woman for French Academy?

PARIS—There is a grave discussion in the Academy of Sciences over the election of a successor to the late Prof. Gernez. It so happens that the vacant seat once belonged to Pierre Curie, who, with his wife, discovered radium. It has been suggested to elect Mme. Curie to the place, but an ancient law of the institute forbids women to attend its sessions even as listeners. Therefore it is regarded as unlikely that Mme. Curie will be elected, although it is universally admitted that she is worthy of the honor.

Fall's Operetta Pleases Vienna.

VIENNA—Leo Fall's new operetta, "Fair Risette," was produced for the first time at the Wiener Theatre. It is considered the season's great success. The libretto by Willner and Brodansky tells a sixteenth century romance. The clever plot furnishes opportunity for a display of the composer's talent. The music is better than that of "The Dollar Princess" or any of his other works.

Indian Princess to Wed a Peer.

LONDON—An engagement of unusual character shortly will be announced, when one of the daughters of the Maharajah of Kuch Behar will become the fiancee of an English peer. This will constitute a precedent in England's relationship with Indian reigning houses, for a direct marriage of the kind never has taken place before.

Paris Has a New Newspaper.

PARIS—A new daily newspaper appeared here this week, the Excelsior. It represents new ideas in the French field, printing the news in brief and devoting a large space to pictures. The proprietor is Pierre Lafitte, a prominent publisher. The editor-in-chief is Paul Rousseau, well known as a writer on sporting topics.

Vatican Consistory Delayed.

LONDON—Events are shaping toward a realization of the late Count de Lesseps's scheme for a transcaspian railroad connecting the Russian and Indian lines. It failed in the early '80s in consequence of Russian and British political antagonism.

HUNT WOMAN IN TRUNK MYSTERY

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—The trunk murder mystery took a new turn to-day when detectives and police set afoot a search for Miss Ellen Enright, who was engaged to marry William Lewis, who may have been a victim of the mysterious crime. The name of Lewis's fiancee was learned to-day for the first time.

At the same time the police continued their hunt for Miss Winton, a woman with whom Lewis was quite friendly while living with the family of Phillip Meagher, in whose custody the trunk had been for several years. Lewis disappeared three hours before the time set for his wedding to Miss Enright who was a nurse. No one has seen him since. Miss Enright caused search to be made for Lewis but without success. Two years ago she sold out her business for registering nurses to Dr. A. G. Blood and mysteriously dropped out of sight herself.

Dr. Blood said to-day that Miss Enright had told his wife of the disappearance of her fiance. She said that all the guests had gathered in the church and waited for the bride and groom for several hours.

Elaborate preparations were made to-day to force a confession from a suspect secretly arrested by the police in connection with the trunk murder. Under the direction of Coroner's Physician Lehane and Professor John McAllister of Bellevue Medical College, the body of the murdered man was returned to the trunk in exactly the same fashion as found by Philip Meagher in his cellar at No. 450 West Fifty-fourth street. The zinc lining was also replaced and all arrangements made at the morgue to give the suspect the "third degree" form of questioning in an effort to make him tell all he knows of the case. The name of the suspect the police absolutely refused to reveal.

It was learned to-day that Lewis was anythe nurse or some of her relatives. It was learned to-day that Lewis was anything but the poor waiter as described by the Meaghers with whom he lived for six months. Lewis, it has been discovered, worked in the Waldorf and other high class places.

OPPOSE MERGER OF CITY DEPARTMENTS

Consolidation of the various city departments on recommendation of Superintendent of Streets Rourke, and under consideration by the City Council to-day, is opposed by the executive committee of the National Federation of State, City and Town Employes' Unions following a meeting of that committee in Wells Memorial building yesterday. The board endorsed the demand made by Boston Bridge & Draw Tender's Union for higher wages, and decided to be represented at the State House during the entire session of the incoming Legislature in an endeavor to secure the enactment of additional labor legislation.

IN MALDEN COURT FOR THE 35TH TIME

George M. Enright of Medford made his thirty-fifth appearance before the Malden Court to-day. Despite the thirty-five hearings he has had for as many alleged petty offences, Enright has never served a day's time. To-day Judge Sweetser sentenced him to the State Farm on a charge of drunkenness. Mrs. Enright pleaded for her husband, saying he was her only support. As a result of this, Judge Sweetser suspended sentence, and Enright's record was unbroken.

EX-FIRE CHIEF SUICIDE.

TRAIN OFF TRACK AND 1,000 WALK

Passengers that jammed a Boston-bound "Narrow Gauge" railroad train were severely jolted and many of the women frightened early to-day when three cars jumped the track at Orient Heights. No one was seriously hurt although many were thrown from their seats.

Several hundred persons had to walk from the spot where the derailment took place to the Orient Heights station where they took other trains to the city. More than 1,000 persons were delayed by the wreck.

The accident tied up all trains on the main line to Lynn and also the Winthrop branch. For half an hour not a train was run. As fast as trains, loaded to the steps with passengers bound for work, arrived at the scene of the accident, they were held up, until a line of cars fully a mile long was stalled. People waited for a time, but when they saw no hope of the trains starting again they got off and walked to Orient Heights and found other means of getting into the city.

Superintendent John A. Fenno said: "The accident was caused by a defective switch. No one was injured. Traffic was tied up for half an hour."

SALEM FEARS A BANDIT WAR

SALEM, Nov. 21.—As a result of reports made by hardware dealers that foreigners, presumably Russians, have been trying to buy automatic revolvers, the police to-day became active in the belief that harm was intended court officials here by friends of the Lynn bandits, Wasili Iwankowski and Andrei Ipsen, who were found guilty of murder last week.

The police activity led to a city-wide search. Near the Salem jail, where the prisoners are confined, Inspector Lehan and two patrolmen took four men in custody. They were taken to headquarters, but were released after clerks in hardware stores failed to identify them as men who tried to purchase revolvers Saturday.

According to the dealers, the revolvers wanted by the quartette were of a make similar to the guns used by Iwankowski and Ipsen in the murder of Thomas Landregan and Patrolman James H. Carroll in Lynn, June 25 last. The police here are convinced that friends of the imprisoned bandits are either planning to shoot up the jail or else to attack court officials.

Because of occurrences of the last few days, the police attach great importance to the statement made by Iwankowski after he had been sentenced by Chief Judge Aiken of the Superior Court on Friday. Iwankowski was interpreted as exclaiming:

"You'll be sorry you did not investigate better."

WOMAN OF 40 MAN'S IDEAL

"Nowadays," writes Jean Finot, a prominent French author, "the woman of thirty (considered the ideal in every way for the last twenty years or so) has been replaced by the woman of forty. The heroines of all our plays and novels are about that age.

M. Finot is known as a writer on philosophy and sociology. His article, which is printed in the current issue of La Revue of Paris, which has attracted wide attention, is entitled "The Death of the Eternal Feminine."

Eternal Feminine Gone.

The writer asks what is to become of woman after she steps into the arena of man and loses those feminine qualities that have always endeared her to man. Will not this cause her to fall from the pedestal upon which man has placed her? The writer answers his own question in this language:

"The eternal feminine is changing in shape and essence; the woman of politics will be different from the home woman, but she will remain a woman all the same. She will be unable to do without those qualities which make her charm; she will be compelled to retain them because love has to remain triumphant and the race must continue."

M. Finot faces the new woman boldly and speaks his mind about her, doing her justice. Woman's weakness and her instinct of prevarication were her chief characteristics in the past. Like all weak and oppressed beings, she had to conceal or disguise her thoughts and to be cunning. That was her only arm against man and strength. All this has changed. Woman has become more and more sincere as she has ascended the social scale. On this phase of the matter the writer says:

Claims Her Rights.

Far from hypocritically enduring her inferiority, she openly claims her rights. She lifts her head and even makes her master bend his. She has entered many careers which were the exclusive domain of man. As doctor, lawyer, clerk, writer, journalist, she reveals solid qualities which command the respect and the fear of man.

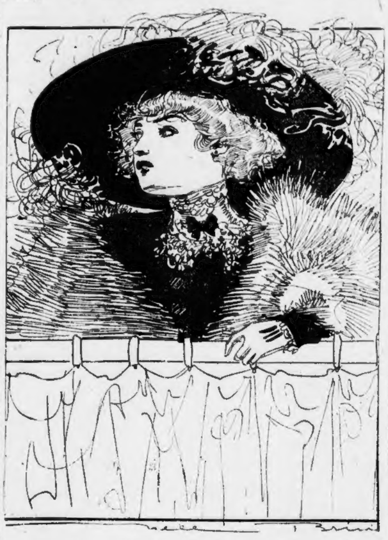
Women are not loved for the same reasons they were thinks M. Finot. Also man's ideal has not the same age, longevity is on the increase and the age for loving and being loved is not what it was. Balzac called a man of forty-four "an old man," and fifty years before Balzac a great French student of sociology wrote in a tearful style of the sad fate of girls who have not found a husband before they are eighteen. Eighteen in those days was the critical age, and the unfortunate young lady who passed it without having found a mate bade fair to remain single all her life.

ARREST BOYS FOR FALSE FIRE ALARMS

William B. Tiest, fourteen, and John J. Barney, sixteen, who live respectively at Nos. 71 and 97 Winter street, Cambridge, were arrested by Inspector Damery of Somerville, on charges of ringing in false alarms of fire.

Do You Know Who This Is?

It is Miss Eleonora Sears of Boston in a wonderful costume of furs, amethyst velvet and black. Drawn at the New York horse show by Nell Brinkley.



Here is a picture of Miss Eleonora Sears which is "somewhat different," as they say.

Maybe you would not recognize it at first glance. Bostonians are accustomed to pictures of Miss Sears in severe clothes of mannish cut, in riding habit, in walking costume and in generally simple, tailored effects.

But this is how she seemed to Nell Brinkley at the New York Horse Show. She was in furs and in amethyst velvet and black. This costume effect was admirably suited to Miss Sears' charming person.

Notice the general air of fluffiness that the artist has drawn into the picture. Fluffiness and Miss Eleonora Sears have hardly been associated in the public mind, on account of her athletic nature and marked individuality.

But, when furs and furbelows are the thing, Miss Sears is just as feminine and fluffy as any other girl. Witness the Horse Show sketch.

RUSSIA MOURNS COUNT TOLSTOI

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 21.—All Russia is in mourning to-day for the passing of Count Leo Tolstoi and, despite the fact that the council of the empire instructed the police to prevent demonstrations in this and other cities out of sorrow for the death of the aged philosopher, they were held.

Flags were displayed at half mast, crepe was hung in front of many buildings and theatres were closed. An exodus towards Yasnaya Poliana started, the great army of mourners including prominent members of every walk of life.

As a mark of respect to the memory of Tolstoi, the Duma adjourned to-day.

Czar Nicholas is said to have declared when the news of Tolstoi's death was conveyed to him:

"The people have lost a real friend."

The religious aspect of Count Tolstoi's burial was unsettled to-day, although rumors were persistently circulated that Loukianoff, procurator of the Holy Synod, had definitely decided that the church should prohibit the carrying out of the Greek Catholic burial ritual. Premier Stolypin and other high Russian dignitaries have expressed regret at the death of Tolstoi.

Body Borne to Old Home.

The prefecture of St. Petersburg to-day warned the newspapers about the manner in which the burial of Count Tolstoi is reported. The papers were advised not to publish the reports of religious ceremonies, if any, at the obsequies.

The body of Tolstoi, attired in the coarse blouse and heavy boots of a peasant—his garb throughout life—was to-day sent from Astopava to his home at Yasnaya Poliana. Telegrams of condolence from rulers, statesmen, men of affairs and the most brilliant lights of the literary world poured in all day, while lowly peasants who crowded the residence at Yasnaya Poliana wept and chanted prayers.

The expression upon the face of the dead humanitarian is as peaceful as that of a sleeping child. Tolstoi evidently died with his feelings best interpreted by a passage from one of his books on theme of death: "The fear of death is unnatural; it is consciousness of sin."

Countess Tolstoi is in a serious condition to-day as the result of the shock of her husband's death. Doctors T. H. Tchurovsky and Vsoff, the specialists from Moscow who were called in for the final conferences over the dying Tolstoi, found it necessary to minister to the Countess. Her daughter, Alexandra, who nursed the Count, is now performing a like task for her mother.

Notable Men in Pilgrimages.

With the return of the Tolstoi family, pilgrimages to Yasnaya Poliana are in progress. Literary men, statesmen, men of affairs and noblemen who admired Count Tolstoi and his work are flocking towards the Tolstoi estate. Followers of Tolstoi's teachings are sending telegrams of condolence to the Countess.

It was reported here to-day at Astopava that the Holy Synod of the Greek Catholic church will adopt the view that Tolstoi's visits to the monastaries of Schamardinsky and Optin indicated his wish to return to the church and will raise no objection over religious ceremonies at his funeral.

FR. MASTERSON TO BE BURIED WEDNESDAY

The people of Peabody are mourning the death of the Rev. M. J. Masterson, pastor of St. John's Catholic Church, who passed away yesterday after a long illness. The funeral will be held on Wednesday. It is expected that Archbishop O'Connell will officiate at the obsequies. Father Masterson was one of the best-known priests in the archdiocese. When he became pastor at Peabody in 1874 he found but a very small congregation and church. Now it includes a fine church, a convent and school and a large parochial residence.

The body of Father Masterson will lie in state in the church until the funeral, with guards of honor from the parish societies.

Father Masterson was born in Longford County, Ireland, on November 27, 1846. He came to the United States early in life and entered St. Joseph's Seminary, Troy, N. Y., where on June 3, 1871, he was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop McQuaid of Rochester. His first appointment was as assistant to the Rev. John J. Gray, then pastor of St. James' parish, Salem.

FINED FOR USING THE UNION LABEL

Harry Segol, proprietor of a dry goods store at No. 649 Broadway, South Boston, was to-day fined $10 in South Boston Court for illegally using a union label. He appealed and was held in $200 for the Superior Court. The complaint against Segol was made by Samuel Aarons, a member of the Cigarmakers' Union. He bought some shirts of Segol. The shirts did not have the label on at the time of purchase, but Segol said, according to Aarons, that he had some labels that he had a right to use and would have them put on. Aarons afterward found out that they were overall labels.

FOSS TO ATTEND DEEP WATERWAYS SESSION

Governor-elect Foss will attend the fifth annual convention of the Lakes to Gulf Deep Waterway Association, to be held in St. Louis beginning November 25. It is expected to be the largest and most important in the history of the organization. More than 5,000 delegates, twenty-three Governors and thirty Congressmen will attend the sessions. Three of the principal speakers of the convention will be Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey, John A. Dix of New York and Judson Harmon of Ohio, all recently elected Governors.

4TH DISTRICT VOTE TO BE RECOUNTED

FITCHBURG, Nov. 21.—The recount of votes in the Fourth Congressional District which was asked for by John J. Mitchell of Marlboro, the Democratic candidate, has been completed, and now James D. Ryan of this city, Socialist candidate for Congress, is to insist on new recounts in twenty-four towns because of the failure of the town clerks or registrars of voters to notify him of the date of the counts.

MASS FOR DEAD OF ST. PATRICK'S SOCIETY

A solemn high mass of requiem will be celebrated for the repose of the souls of deceased members of St. Patrick's Total Abstinence and Literary Society in St. Patrick's Church, Dudley street, Roxbury, Thursday at 9 a. m., to which the parishioners are invited. A committee of ushers will be appointed at to-night's meeting of the society in the rooms, No. 431 Dudley street.

MEETING OF PILGRIMS.

The Pilgrim Publicity Association "Manufacturer's Night" meeting will be held at the Exchange Club rooms, No. 118 Milk street tonight. I. H. Sawyer of the Brown Shoe Company, St. Louis; O. C. Harn of the National Lead Company, New York; J. W. T. Knox of Boston, ex-president of the Adcraft Club of Detroit; and George B. Smith of this city, will speak.

Johnny Harvard Has Signed Up a Crimson Daffydil

(Reproduced from the Only One Bulletin, published at Harvard.)

CLASS OF NAUGHTY-ONE SURE HAS SOME "CLASS" IN LITERATURE AND ART.

Hey, you "Tad"—go buy a crimson necktie—Johnny Harvard has just signed up a Daffydil.

You know Daffydil—those funny little comics that "Tad" springs every little while in the BOSTON AMERICAN?

The Only One Bulletin, just issued by the Harvard class of '01 to boom its decennial reunion next June, carries a Daffydil relating to the anniversary plans.

The Only One Bulletin is a bright publication. It has a Mutt and Jeff cartoon, jokes upon the class members, some serious articles regarding reunion plans and other stuff to work up an interest in the decennial reunion of '01.

Using one of "Tad's" Daffydils is just another way of showing that the class of '01 is up to the humorous times.

It begins to look as though Mutt, Jeff and Daffydil might qualify for an honorary Harvard degree.

The circulation of the AMERICAN is 250,000 more than its next highest competitor and 75,000 more than all the other evening papers of Boston combined.

MISS TAFT SETS FAD ON COLLARS

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—Because Miss Helen Taft embroiders her own collars, and says so with much pride, all the girls in her set are also making dainty dress accessories. Miss Alice Boutell, daughter of Representative Boutell of Illinois, wears a dainty shirtwaist of blue chiffon embroidered with orchids by her own hand. Miss Gladys Hinckley embroiders her own slippers. She has designed a pair for each of her new gowns. Donna Beatrice Cousani, the debutante daughter of the Italian Ambassador, wears an exquisite gown of white satin, the lace at the neck and throat being her own handiwork.

Miss Marthena Harrison, the granddaughter of ex-President Harrison, has also started a fad among the Washington younger set. It is the fashioning of her own jewelry. Miss Harrison while in Egypt procured a rare stone and, having been a student at the Arts and Crafts School for several winters, she determined to set it herself. This ring is unique and distinctive. Since that time she has fashioned herself an exquisite bandeau of coral and turquoise, and has several good looking pins which are her own make. Miss Harrison has also made a belt buckle to match each one of her tailored suits and has also an exquisite muff chain of amethyst.

Miss Ruth Pilling, not to be outdone by the other girls, has embroidered an exquisite evening gown of pale pink. The design of the embroidery is bunches of pale pink moss rosebuds and forget-me-nots.

CENSUS BUREAU COTTON REPORT

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—The census bureau's report to-day placed the quantity of cotton ginned from the growth of 1910 until November 14 at 8,764,153 bales, counting round as half bales against 7,339,983 on November 1, 1910 and 8,112,199 on November 14, 1909 and 8,595,809 on November 14, 1908 and 7,300,065 on November 14, 1907. The total amount ginned shows a percentage for the last three crops of 80.5 for 1909, 73.3 for 1908, 66.1 for 1907. Round bales included this year are 91,939; compared with 123,757 for 1909; 173,908 for 1908; 142,210 for 1907; Sea Island 52,585 for 1910; 68,495 for 1909; 50,701 for 1908, and 44,698 for 1907.

ASK WOMEN NOT TO WEAR HATS IN CHURCH

Hereafter women attending the Warren Avenue Baptist Church will be requested to remove their hats. This was decided by vote of the men attending the service. The vote was practically unanimous. Next Sunday the experiment will be tried. For the first time in many years a woman was allowed to speak from the Warren Avenue Church pulpit. Miss Blanche White spoke for five minutes asking for funds to aid a movement she is starting to keep cigarettes out of the possession of minors and to prosecute in the courts those who sell the cigarettes to them.

HENRY M. HOYT DEAD AT CAPITAL

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—Henry Martyn Hoyt, counsellor for the Department of State, is dead at his home here from peritonitis.

Mr. Hoyt was the strong right arm of Philander C. Knox, when the latter was attorney-general. In fact, he made himself so indispensible to his chief that when Mr. Knox became Secretary of State Mr. Knox lost no time in obtaining the transfer of Judge Hoyt from the department of justice to his department.

CHRISTMAS SLOGAN IS "MAIL GIFTS EARLY"

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—"Mail your gifts ahead of the rush, but don't open before Christmas," is the slogan of the Postoffice Department in its campaign to minimize the annual congestion of Christmas mail. Now the postal officials are hoping that wherever possible gift senders will get their mail in early and put the inscription quoted on the outside of the package in print or in rubber stamp impression if enough mail is sent to permit a rubber stamp under the law.

KAISER IN TIFF WITH DAUGHTER

BERLIN, Nov. 21.—According to Berlin society gossip Princess Victoria has signalized her coming of age by having a serious tiff with the Kaiser, her father, over her enthusiastic support of emancipation of women. The Princess doesn't share her imperial father's enthusiasm for kitchen and domestic interests, and she argued at length with him about his famous speech against woman suffrage recently.

The Kaiser, who is very anxious to keep the Princess in a state of girlhood as long as possible, was astonished by his daughter's obvious grasp of the latest emancipation arguments, and horrorstruck by her obvious intention to use her influence to help girls to independence.

The Princess is said to have argued that the position of women in Germany is ridiculously mediaeval. The German idea of woman's mission is to catch an officer for a husband, using her dowry or pretty face as bait. The Princess said that, women being more and more compelled to enter the arena in the struggle for a livelihood, it was imperative that the Kaiser stop talking about woman's proper place being the nursery or the kitchen.

By way of giving public expression to her feelings, the Princess paid a long surprise visit to the Lette Society's institute for teaching young women how to earn a livelihood and independence.

BOSTON GIRL PLAYS MARY GARDEN ROLE

To be called on to take the place of Mary Garden and create the leading role in a new opera, are the distinctions conferred upon Mme. Carolyn White-Longone, a young Boston soprano, who has returned for a musical conquest of her native land after triumphs in critical Italy, the home of opera.

It all comes out appropriately. Mary Garden, whom Andreas Dippel had cast for the role of the girl in Puccini's newest opera, "The Girl of the Golden West," cannot sing in Italian, and in the limited time of rehearsal will not trust herself to learn it. So she has reluctantly abandoned the principal role in an opera wholly American in theme, and the Boston girl gets her place.

Miss White is a native of Allston.

SOMETHING NEW

A whole store on Washington Street, opposite Bromfield, devoted exclusively to the sale of furs, fur coats, Automobile coats, caps, gloves, robes, etc.

All persons who enjoy buying reliable goods at a very large discount from the usual prices are invited to examine this stock.

Probably there is no line of merchandise so deceptive as furs, as they are made and dyed in this country today, but in this case we have the means of assurance that nothing can be purchased or sold amongst these goods for what it is not.

We have two large stocks, one upon which the New Netherland Bank of New York advanced a large sum of money and one upon which a private banker advanced a large sum and was compelled to take the goods from the manufacturer.

In these two stocks, are: Ladies' Caracul coats, $12 to $85. Pony coats, $15 to $60. Near Seal, $10 to $75. 50 and 52 inch Russian Marmot coats, $48.50 to $87.50.

One 54-inch Mink Marmot Coat, with a deep bear trimmed collar and 8-inch bear flounce, $125.00.

One 52-inch Mink Marmot with Fisher raccoon collar, $100.

One 52-inch Mink Marmot with long roll Jap mink collar, $87.50.

Six 50 and 52 inch Russian Marmot Coats, with deep beaver collar, $72.50.

MEN'S COATS

58 black fur Chauffeurs' Coats, $13.50 each.

50 black fur Chauffeurs' Coats, $15.00 each.

28 black fur Chauffeurs' Coats, $18.00.

23-pieced raccoon Coats, $22.50 and $27.50 each.

These goods are all ready except 138 fur lined coats, kersey and broadcloth shell, excellent quality, real Persian lamb collars, to be sold at $26.00 to $40.00 each. They are due in Boston this morning but we cannot promise them before Tuesday.

Also, all ready, men's and women's Raccoon and other fur lined and fur outside gloves, $1.50 to $10.00.

Men's automobile and driving caps in raccoon, muskrat and Australian opossum, $3.00 to $7.50.

Numberless neckpieces—muffs and sets of almost every character.

Yours truly,
RAYMOND,

ASKS PENSIONS FOR MOTHERS

Pensions for every mother in the United States and the utter elimination of mothers as workers in factories, stores and all industries were advocated by the Rev. Dr. George Luther Cady, pastor of Pilgrim Congregational Church, Dorchester, in a sermon on "The Family: Its Industrial Destruction."

"The mother of today who works in a factory or in any industrial business is little better than a fish mother, because her children are neglected as is the fish family," said Rev. Dr. Cady.

Continuing, he said:

"I believe for a woman to work is a sin. The world would be better off if every woman walked out of the shop and let her husband earn the living. I cannot see the security of the modern woman in the modern industry.

"The woman who labors is falling utterly and [illegible] to pay attention to her [illegible] that your mother did to you. What can be the result then of such a condition? She cannot give birth to strong children, strong mentally and physically. [illegible] a short life and what she [illegible] claimed by the penitentiary, hospital or insane asylums.

"There is but one remedy to prevent a woman from working and that is to pension every mother in the United States. Maternity is the biggest asset a nation has. We need a thorough reorganization of our industrial life that the mother can stay at home and take care of the children. Our modern industries as they are are robbing us of our children.

"The mother works because she thinks there will be more money. However, when she works her husband's pay drops. Pope Leo's definition of the living wage is that the father should receive enough to support the family himself. This is not a reality, however, in this country. We ought to have a socialism and anarchy until a living wage is reached to keep these mothers from work."

CHURCH WITHOUT A CREED IS FOUNDED

BURLINGTON, Vt., Nov. 21.—Rev. John M. Paige, for many years a resident of Springfield, Mass., and until within a short time a minister of the Universalist church, has been ordained as pastor of the Everyday Church of Burlington, an organization of his own creation and the first of its kind in the world. In his sermon at today's simple ceremony in Knights of Pythias Hall, Mr. Paige outlined the principles of the church as being one without creed, which recognizes a man for his worth to his fellows rather than his financial standing; which strives for truth as it is shown by the light of modern ideas rather than by traditions; that discourages public prayer; that has for its cardinal principles simplicity and humanity.

PASSENGERS PUT OUT FIRE IN CAR

MALDEN, Nov. 20.—The stillness of Florence street was rudely interrupted when a Boston & Northern electric car caught fire on that thoroughfare, and a hurried bucket brigade which was formed found volunteers among the passengers and residents nearby. The amateur [illegible] fire fighters did such good work that the blaze was put out before the car had been seriously damaged. The men passengers formed a brigade with a restaurant on Florence street as a centre and brought out buckets of water which they dashed on the fire until it was extinguished.

You see the AMERICAN everywhere—but most prominently in the homes.

FOSS MAKES FIGHT ON SENATOR LODGE

"I am going direct to the people with this fight.

"Nominally, Senator Lodge has a stronger vote in the Legislature than the opposition. But I do not think he will be elected. That a number of the Republican members are opposed to him, is a fact we all know. I think the progressive Republicans will repudiate Lodge as the people have repudiated him. They have told him as plainly as they could in the election:

"'Senator Lodge, we do not want you and we do not propose to stand for you.'

"And the voters won't. The anti-Lodge sentiment was never so strong as it is today, and it is growing stronger every day. They have told Lodge the senatorship does not belong to him. Neither they nor I, as Governor, will stand for a theft. Senator Lodge is not big enough, strong armed though he is, to break through the steel that safeguards the properties of the people of this Commonwealth. We'll catch him in the act, despite gumshoe methods. Persistent, pitiless publicity ought to win out in the end, and the next picture on the screen should be of Senator Henry Cabot Lodge living the retired life in his home at Nahant. Politically, Senator Lodge must be downed.

Demands He Withdraw.

"In the name of the majority of the sovereign people of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, I demand that Henry Cabot Lodge surrender his seat in the United States Senate by withdrawing from his contest for re-election. If he does not know that he has been 'licked to a frazzle' some friend had better tell him.

"His election to the Senate would be a repudiation of the great victory of the people at the last election. He was on trial as much, if not more, than Governor Draper, and if he had been the candidate my majority would have been double what it was.

"The issues on which the fight was made, on which I was elected, were honest tariff revision downward, lower duties on the necessaries of life, free raw materials, an untaxed food supply, reciprocity with Canada, and more democracy in our form of government.

"This is the program: Take all duties off food products whether Canada does or not. Take all duties off raw materials. Reduce our tariff on manufactured products to a level with those of Canada as an earnest of our good faith. An income tax that the wealth of the country may pay its fair share of the expenses of government. Election of United States Senators by the people, and the direct control of legislation through the popular vote.

"Where does Senator Lodge stand upon these issues?

"Must Surrender or Fight."

"We all know where he stands and where he has stood all these years. To re-elect him would be a step backward and Massachusetts has never learned to walk backward.

"I shall never sign his credentials except at the end of the campaign, which will make the last one look like an afternoon tea party. He must surrender or fight. He must defend his position before the people. The people of Massachusetts will not permit him longer to manipulate the Legislature. I am ready and if he does not retire will be on the stump in every section of the State, and we will find out where the people stand. Senator Lodge is not in touch with the new order of things, with the progressive spirit of the times. He doesn't represent the people, the men and women in the ordinary walks of life. He represents special interests that have exploited the people, a class of capitalists like the gentleman who declared in a public gathering recently that the way to reduce the cost of living was to bring about a period of depression, throw the people out of work, send them to public soup houses for their food, turn them into charity applicants and force them to vote 'right' by first making paupers of them.

"I do not deny Senator Lodge's ability, but only regret that he has seen fit to employ his talents in the wrong direction. For he has drifted away from policies that brought him in touch with the people, and has thrown his powerful influence in favor of the trusts and special interests, until he has ceased to be a representative of the people, has ignored their wishes and turned a deaf ear to their needs.

Ready for Campaign.

"I will not sit quietly and see the work of years thrown absolutely away while Senator Lodge tries to manipulate his election, trusting to his superior skill in playing the game to force a victory against the desires of the people. The people voted overwhelmingly for the principles I stand for, but that victory would be rendered absolutely void and worthless should Senator Lodge, who opposed the legislation the people voted for, be sent back to the United States Senate to work and vote against the relief the people have demanded.

"If Senator Lodge will meet the issues and defend his course he will be given the opportunity, for unless he withdraws I shall start at once on a State-wide campaign, going into the cities and towns holding meetings where I will discuss his official acts, his votes, his known and admitted position on the questions on which the people have already voiced their opinion.

"The people will be given an opportunity in public mass meetings to voice their sentiments. Their case will be referred to them. Their verdict will be made known to the Legislature and I have no doubt as to the outcome.

"The people of the State, if they indicated anything by their votes, indicated their wish that Senator Lodge retire. Their action was a repudiation of Senator Lodge and the tariff for which he was so largely responsible. Shall the Lodge machine, in defiance of that expression of opinion of the people, be permitted to force through the election of Senator Lodge.

"Must Not Be Returned."

"This is the issue and I am ready to meet it. I am unwilling that the work for tariff revision, lower cost of living and Canadian reciprocity and better government shall be hampered and delayed by Senator Lodge, who, if re-elected, would become the head and front of the ultra-high protective reactionary movement.

"Senator Lodge must either get out of his own accord or be forced out by the positive demand of the people. He must not be returned to the Senate. I earnestly hope that the legislators will not commit themselves to any part of their legislative program until public opinion has thus had full expression."

REAL EXPERT ON THIN ICE SHOULD GIVE HIS VIEWS

The Boston Journal asks for public endorsement of its campaign against thin ice.

Will Henry Cabot Lodge please step forward and give his views?

MAKE ADVANCE IN CANCER WAR

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—It was announced recently that Dr. Alexis Carrel and Dr. Montrose T. Burrows, experimenting in the laboratories of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, had succeeded in accomplishing a physiological marvel by cultivating tissues and organs taken from the body so that they were actually being kept alive and their cell growth multiplied.

A number of physicians and surgeons have been informed in the last few days that a portion of a cancerous tumor is being propagated by these surgeons in a similar way, and that its increase can be observed by the naked eye. The cell multiplication and structural growth are, of course, subjects for microscopical study.

The significance of the growth of this tumor outside of the body is apparent; the medium in which it flourishes has been selected by the surgeons themselves—a fluid prepared by them; it remains to discover something which inhibits or destroys the growth and at the same time can be used with safety at the seat of malignancy in the body itself. This "something" undoubtedly would be a cure for cancer. The object of the present experiment is, of course, in this direction.

FAMILY PERISHES IN MYSTERIOUS FIRE

MARYSVILLE, Mo., Nov. 21.—The bodies of Otis Hubbell and his three children were found in the ruins of their burned home early today. Traces of blood were found on the charred clothing of the victims and the police declared that the four were murdered. According to the police theory the father and his three children were beaten to death and the house subsequently set on fire to cover the crime.

21 YEAR LIMIT ON WOMEN'S AGE

WORCESTER, Nov. 21.—Miss Stephanie Grant, Worcester's only woman lawyer, also candidate for the Republican nomination for School Committee from Ward 1, thinks that twenty-one years might be the permanent age limit for women.

This is the "idee," as they say. Women must be twenty-one in order to vote, but so long as they say they have attained that age what is the use of making them state the exact number of years? Miss Grant says:

"It has been suggested to me that I try to get a law through the Legislature whereby women, upon swearing that they are at least twenty-one years old, need not tell their exact age when getting married or registered for voting. That may sound humorous at first. But the woman who made the suggestion to me was sincere. I quite agree with this woman that there is no need of such fibbing on marriage licenses. The cause of suffrage, too, would be greatly helped if women, who are within the law at twenty-one years, need not state their exact age."

If such a law is passed, then no woman, even though she have gray hairs, need be over twenty-one years of age, so far as the law or publicity are concerned.

The registrar of votes, the census man, the clerk on marriage licenses and the cross-examining attorney and all others who are entitled to ascertain a woman's age, could no longer badger and browbeat a woman into confessing to advanced age. The woman could stand pat on this blessed answer: "I am at least twenty-one years old."

Miss Grant does not state her own age in the interview. But she was graduated from Smith College in the class of 1903. If she were twenty-two years old at that time, she would now be——well, she would be "at least twenty-one."

KENTUCKY COAL MINES ON FIRE

LEXINGTON, Ky., Nov. 21.—The coal mines at Stearns, Ky., are on fire, and Assistant Inspector Thomas Barr of this city has left for the scene with life saving helmets and other apparatus. The origin of the fire is not known, and no one has been reported killed or injured. The miners endeavored to stop the flames with a line of hose, but the fire continued to spread.

OVERDUE LINERS HELD BY STORM

Anxiety was expressed to-day for a number of overdue trans-Atlantic liners which have been encountering heavy weather in the north Atlantic. Captains of two liners docking to-day reported unusually severe headwinds. The vessels to arrive to-day, both overdue, were the Wilson liner Galileo from Hull, and the Scandinavian liner Pennsylvania from Scandinavian ports.

Considerable anxiety is felt for the British steamship Comeric, with a million dollar cargo from Calcutta, which passed Gibraltar enroute to Boston, three weeks ago. The vessel is now a week overdue.

A wireless was received from the Italian liner Lazio this morning stating that the steamship with 300 passengers aboard expected to dock late this afternoon.

RUSH WORK ON PANAMA CANAL

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—Signs that the Panama canal is moving rapidly along to completion are contained in the annual report of the Isthmian Canal Commission for the year ending June 30, 1910, which has just been made public.

The construction of the lock gates has been contracted for and will be completed by June 1, 1915. These contracts have been awarded to the McClintic-Marshall Construction Company of Pittsburg, Pa., their bid for the entire work being $5,374,474.82. There will be 46 gates in all and according to the contract the work of erection at Gatun is to begin on January 1, 1911, and to be completed on February 1, 1913; at Pedro Miguel the work of erection is to begin March 1, 1911, and to be completed May 1, 1912, and at Miraflores work is to begin January 1, 1912, and to be completed June 1, 1913.

Of the $375,201,000, which it is estimated it will cost to build the canal there remains only $127,199,531.42 to be appropriated. The total classified expenditures of canal work to June 30, 1910, amounted to $191,258,113.93, of which $31,188,426.37 were the net expenditures during the fiscal year covered by this report. Of the total classified expenditures to June 30, 1910, $25,699,450.81 were for plant and equipment for construction work, of which $4,388,511.55 were expended during the fiscal year.

That part of the report pertaining to the progress being made in the construction work is divided into Atlantic, Central and Pacific divisions.

Among the important pieces of work on the Atlantic division are the Gatun locks and dam. During the year 3,965,699 yards in the dry and 435,178 yards in the wet were removed from the lock chambers. In addition to this work there were removed 646,520 cubic yards of material in auxiliary including dredging in the French canal.

The excavation in the upper locks was completed, including the trenching for the curtain walls and for the lateral culverts in that portion where these culverts were below the excavated area. With the exception of the trenching required for the internal culverts, the excavations for the intermediate locks was completed.

The excavation for the lower locks, exclusive of the approach walls, was also undertaken, and 375,000 cubic yards remain to be removed. The average cost of the excavation for the past six months, including plant charges and division expenses was $0.6751 per cubic yard.

HUNTING 30-POUND TURKEY FOR TAFT

WINSTED, Ct., Nov. 21.—President Taft's Thanksgiving turkey will undoubtedly be a Connecticut bird, because Horace Vose of Westerly, R. I., who has furnished the turkey for every President from Grant to Taft, is scouring southeastern Connecticut for the best in the turkey line. Contrary to general belief, Vose does not raise turkeys, but merely deals in them at Thanksgiving and Christmas. He has not made his selection yet, but says the White House gobbler will not weigh less than thirty pounds, and the best will be none too good.

MAIL FROM BOSTON DESTROYED IN CAR

UTICA, N. Y., Nov. 21.—Fire which started in a through mail car from Boston to San Francisco, destroyed the car and a large portion of the contents on the run from Schenectady to Fonda. The car was attached to Train No. 35, on the New York Central line, which left Boston on Saturday and was filled with first and second class mail.

The circulation of the AMERICAN is 250,000 more than its next highest competitor and 75,000 more than all the other evening papers of Boston combined.

PUTS AN END TO INDIGESTION AND A SOUR, GASSY, UPSET STOMACH

As there is often some one in your family who suffers an attack of indigestion or some form of Stomach trouble, why don't you keep some Diapepsin in the house handy?

This harmless blessing will digest anything you can eat without the slightest discomfort, and overcome a sour, gassy Stomach five minutes after.

Tell your pharmacist to let you read the formula plainly printed on these 50-cent cases of Pape's Diapepsin then you will readily see why it makes Indigestion, Sour Stomach, Heartburn and other distress go in five minutes and relieves at once such miseries as Belching of Gas, Eructations of sour, undigested food, Nausea, Headaches, Dizziness, Constipation and other Stomach disorders.

Some folks have tried so long to find relief from Indigestion and Dyspepsia or an out-of-order stomach with the common every-day cures advertised that they have about made up their minds that they have something else wrong, or believe theirs is a case of Nervousness, Gastritis, Catarrh of the Stomach or Cancer.

This, no doubt, is a serious mistake. Your real trouble is, what you eat does not digest; instead, it ferments and sours turns to acid. Gas and Stomach poison, which putrefy in the digestive tract and intestines, and, besides, poison the breath with nauseous odors.

A hearty appetite, with thorough digestion, and without the slightest discomfort or misery of the Stomach, is waiting for you as soon as you decide to try Pape's Diapepsin.

WEST WANTED BY FEDERAL MEN

Charges of a more serious nature than those now pressed against him are made by Washington officers who are in Baltimore, asking that Hade H. West, alias "Father" Eagan, alias "Lieutenant Commander Knowlson, U. S. N., who was denounced by Cardinal Gibbons, who is held there charged with various thefts and swindling operations. West is held in default of $5,000 bail.

According to Baltimore police officials there is much doubt if West will be given up by the officers there until he has stood trial in the courts. The request of the Washington officers for delivery of the prisoner will probably be refused.

The Brookline police say that West is a Detroit banker, who failed in the slump of the copper panic in 1908; that he is a college man, who has served in the diplomatic corps at Washington and that while serving in that capacity he married the daughter of a prominent naval officer. She has borne him four children.

Sought for Months.

West has been sought after for months by the police of New York, Brooklyn, Washington, Baltimore and Detroit, as an imposter who has swindled bankers and brokers and tradesmen out of thousands of dollars by means of forged checks.

West is a user of morphine and the fact that he was locked up for nearly thirty-six hours without the drug has changed him from the daring, self-styled priest he represented himself to be, when he faced the cardinal, to a trembling, stoop-shouldered man, with watery eyes and nervous fingers that constantly twitched as he fumbled at his smooth-shaven chin.

West has been closely watched. His attempt to shoot himself when standing before the desk in the station house made the police suspect that he would make some further attempt upon his life.

Federal Officers Want Him.

West heaved a sigh of relief when ordered to jail. Before going he was taken to the bureau of identification where his measurements were recorded. In the privacy of the Bertillon bureau he apparently was at ease and he talked a little with Lieutenant Casey. West was measured by the Bertillon system in Washington nine years ago.

"You have a scar on your left leg," said Lieutenant Casey.

"A scar? Which leg?" asked West, smiling.

"The left," replied the lieutenant.

"You're right," said West.

West refused to tell what caused the wound.

Postal Inspector Samuel M. Hooton stated that it is more than likely that the Federal authorities will handle the cases against West. He is wanted by the Federal officers for stealing and forging U. S. money orders and disposing of government bonds illegitimately secured.

SUBURBS AID "REAL BOSTON"

Business men in the suburbs are becoming interested in the movement of the Chamber of Commerce for a "Real Boston," and the "Real Boston" committee of the Chamber is busy extending the list of indorsers of the plan to bring about recognition by the world at large of the commercial and industrial importance of Greater Boston as the centre of a million and a half population.

In each suburb local committees are being formed to advance the campaign. The general committee desires it understood it is not working for annexation and that the objects in view can be accomplished by some form of federation or co-operation.

In the official Chamber of Commerce bulletin, the News, issued to-day, the committee states:

"Boston has a low commercial rating among the cities of the country. It is credited with having less than one-half of its real population and of doing less than one-third of its actual volume of business. This is because the census figures given are for municipal Boston only. They should be for 'Real Boston'—the Boston industrial district, as defined by the United States Census Bureau itself. The figures for 'Real Boston' are chopped up and scattered among two score cities and towns in the metropolitan district. This situation is hurtful to the business interests and should be remedied.

"Under present conditions the Census Bureau can only credit Boston with the statistics relating to municipal Boston. This can only be corrected when the Massachusetts Legislature recognizes the 'Real Boston' by law—in other words, when the Massachusetts Legislature makes some provision by law for some form of federation or co-operation between the cities and towns comprising the 'Real Boston.'"

COUNTERFEIT COINS FOUND IN PRISON

COLUMBUS, O., Nov 21.—Counterfeit nickels and quarters of the date 1903, aggregating $100 in amount have been found in a penitentiary sewer. They are thought to have been made by a prisoner who served five terms in the penitentiary, and who was detected in the act of making coins in one of the prison shops. President Taft pardoned him for one of his earlier offences.

CROKER BACK; PLAYS A JOKE

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—Richard Croker, former chieftain of Tammany Hall, but now a landed proprietor in Ireland, arrived on the White Star steamer Baltic. His first act after stepping ashore was to play a practical joke on a customs inspector. It was a joke he had carefully planned, and he took so much pleasure in it that it seemed a pity it was only half successful. Among the Croker luggage was an innocent looking square box about three feet high. The customs inspector burrowed his way through a number of trunks and bags and finally reached this box.

"Nothing but a few hats in there," said the former Tammany boss, "but you'd better open it anyway."

The inspector threw back the cover and as he did, a great snake uncoiled itself slowly and made a half spring at him. Then it collapsed limply and the joke was over. It was a mechanical snake, but if it had not had its spring disturbed by being tossed about the pier its jump would have been sufficiently realistic to have startled any one. As it was it gave the inspector quite a jolt.

Mr. Crocker was greatly disappointed over the snake. It was said afterwards by one of his friends that he had looked forward with keen pleasure to this joke and had himself wound up the snake and placed it in position in the box. The idea of giving an inspector a fright suggested itself to him after he heard of the trouble Collector Loeb's men were giving incoming passengers.

COLLEGE PARADE ANGERS ADRIANCE

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Nov. 21.—Reynolds Adriance, of this city, was filled with wrath when he learned that his nephews E. H. Adriance and H. E. Adriance, Jr., freshmen at Williams College, had impersonated his wife and daughter as "the smugglers" in the annual parade of the Williams College freshmen. "What of it if these boys are my nephews?" Adriance demanded. "I would like to know why we should be dragged into publicity again. We have had enough of that sort of thing, without having the family paraded before the public every little while because of little misunderstandings with the customs officials in New York. The incident was closed long ago." The offending Adriance boys have been frequent visitors at the house of their uncle here.

INNKEEPER SUES PRINCESS LOUISE

BRUSSELS, Nov. 21.—Wechtels, an elderly innkeeper at Frohsdorf, near Vienna, is suing the Princess Louise, daughter of the late King Leopold and divorced wife of Prince Philip of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, and Lieutenant Mattachich with whom the Princess eloped, for $75,000. He holds vouchers signed by the Princess and Mattachich. The latter, however, is penniless. Wechtels told the court that he was the mainstay of the Princess in her sensational flight. The promissory notes she signed have not been paid and Wechtels begged the court to order their payment.

CLASS OF 1885 ASKS CHANGE AT AMHERST

AMHERST, Nov. 21.—Asserting that their alma mater should confine itself exclusively to classical education, the class of 1885, in a memorial to the board of trustees, advocates changes in the curriculum of Amherst College. After expressing the belief that the institution can no longer compete successfully with either the State university or the technical school it makes several recommendations.

AVIATOR MARS FALLS AT DENVER

DENVER, Nov. 21.—J. C. (Bud) Mars made three futile attempts to fly his Curtiss biplane at Overland Park. On the third attempt he rose ten feet and then fell to the ground within fifty yards of the spot where Ralph Johnstone met death on Thursday. Mars was not hurt, but the right wing of his machine was wrecked.

CHARWOMEN ASK FOR HIGHER WAGES

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—Uncle Sam's charwomen, especially those who work in the Treasury, are on a campaign for higher wages, and have enlisted in their support Mrs. Belva Lockwood, the first woman admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the United States and a prominent suffragette. The charwomen say they have to do twice as much work as formerly for the same pay.

FILENE TALKS TO LABOR MEN

What share of the task of [illegible] the Boston-1915 movement is being done by organized labor, was told by Edward A. Filene in an address in Faneuil Hall at a largely attended meeting held under the auspices of the Boston Central Labor Union, in connection with the civic advance campaign. Mr. Filene said in part:

"Among the common interests of Boston-1915 and labor are some of the most important of the interests of the community as a whole. If you will help Boston-1915 and let Boston-1915 help you in improving relations between employers and employes, for instance, you will be making the largest single contribution possible, as I see it, to the commercial and industrial development of Boston.

"If Boston could properly say that the relations between its employers and their employes were 25 per cent. better than any other city in the country could show—if it could guarantee that labor conditions were even 10 per cent. more stable here than in other places, it would offer an inducement for starting new industries and bringing outside capital here far stronger than the proffers of free land, or of exemption from taxation, or other things which many communities depend upon as bait to draw new industries. The result would be a greater and faster industrial and commercial growth than any other city has ever had.

"We should set about making Boston the Paris of America—the centre of fine work. In addition to what we are making we should manufacture things whose value is not so much in the materials from which they are made as in the perfection of the workmanship and the art and science that go into them. These kinds of things the United States imports in enormous quantities. These kinds of things pay the largest profits to the makers, and with safety to the employer can be made to pay the highest wages to labor. We should make in Boston a great part of what the United States now imports of these things."

Other speakers were Paul V. Kellogg, managing editor of the Survey, and Mrs. Florence Kelley of New York, secretary of the Consumers League.

WOBURN DEDICATES SPANISH WAR TABLET

WOBURN, Nov. 21.—The memorial tablet erected by the city of Woburn on the southeasterly corner of the Common, in honor and to the memory of the men who died in the Spanish-American war, has been dedicated. The exercises were conducted by a committee from the Common Council and the Charles H. Moloy Camp S. W. V., assisted by Company G, Fifth Regiment, the G. A. R. and a large company of citizens. The presentation address was made by Acting Mayor William H. Henchey, president of the Common Council. The unveiling of the tablet was by ex-Alderman John F. Moloy, brother of Charles H. Moloy, in whose honor the local camp was named, and who was one of those killed in battle. Commander John J. Harris of Charles H. Moloy Camp, and the singing of "America" and the benediction made up the rest of the program.

The tablet of bronze rests on the east face of a large field boulder at the southeast corner of the Common, a short distance south of the Soldiers' monument. It is surrounded by a newly laid grass plot within an enclosure.

GUESTS ALARMED AT QUINCY HOUSE FIRE

A small fire in the basement of the Quincy House gave several of the guests at the hotel a scare. There was no panic. One of the attendants in passing through the basement discovered the fire and rushed upstairs to spread the alarm. A large crowd of people gathered outside the hotel and the arrival of the fire apparatus caused considerable confusion. Guests occupying rooms on the upper floors of the hotel, who had not been notified of the fire, became alarmed when they heard the clanging of the gongs on the apparatus and hurried to the street. The fire was quickly put out and the damage was slight. The blaze is thought to have been the result of a short circuit caused by crossed wires.

KELIHER NOT AFTER GOVERNMENT JOB

The business of waiting for Congress to reassemble being rather tedious, the Washington correspondents earned their salaries last night by sending over a nice little story about a boom for Congressman John A. Keliher to be Sergeant-at-Arms of the Congress which convenes in December, 1911. The dispatches had it that the boom had been launched without Keliher's knowledge.

The Ninth District Congressman was told about it last night and asked what the answer was. He didn't exactly throw his chance of winning the place over his shoulder and say "scat," but he did deny that he is a candidate for the office.

FILENE URGES WORKINGMEN TO CO-OPERATE

Organized labor and other organizations have already done much to better the relations between the man who works and the man for whom he works. We are freer from serious labor troubles in Boston than are the people in most large cities. But there is still a good deal that might be done, and I suppose there is nobody who would be any more glad to do it or would benefit more by its results than labor itself. If it is to be well done, labor must have much co-operation and in turn must co-operate even more largely than in the past. Every one of the 1,200 organizations in Boston-1915 would benefit, itself and its work, directly as well as indirectly, by aiding labor to attain this goal of good living.—Edward A. Filene, at Boston-1915 meeting in Faneuil Hall.

ARMY-NAVY GAME NOW HOLDS INTEREST

ANNAPOLIS, Nov. 21.—Not only are the representatives of the Army and Navy looking forward to the game between West Point and Annapolis at Philadelphia Saturday with more than the usual interest on account of the omission of the game last year, but from a purely athletic standpoint the game should exceed in interest that of any previous year.

By its victory over Yale and its close game with Harvard, the Army lads made a greater reputation than their Navy rivals, but observers of the game know that the Navy team has been developed slowly, but has improved with every game, and its victory over the Carlisle Indians on November 12, without giving away any of their inside game, was a performance which puts them in the same rank with the Military eleven.

The Navy coaches have almost been harrassed throughout the season by the experience of their material, and the problem has been rather to choose between two or more good men for every position than to scheme to find a man to fill it.

Navy Men Watched Army.

The Naval Academy coaches have kept in close touch with the game played by the Army team, and one or more members of the staff has been present at every game played by the Military Academy team this season.

From the reports brought back, the Army has a great team, but there is no doubt in the minds of the Navy folks that the material at Annapolis is good enough to win out.

The line has been powerful from the start, and there are so many good substitutes that the loss of some of the regulars would not materially weaken the team.

The policy of the local coaches has been to give these substitutes plenty of chances to play in matches. Consequently, it is not necessary to fill in with inexperienced men should any of the regulars have to drop out.

The loss of Captain T. Starr King, who is ill with typhoid fever, is a serious one, but either Douglas or Davis will make an excellent substitute.

The team will miss the leadership of King greatly, but the loss will be lessened by the steadying effect of such veterans as acting Captain Wright and former Captain Clay.

Lieutenant F. G. Berrien, head coach, speaks of King in the highest terms as a leader of men and as a player. He believes him both the best captain and the best tackle that the Naval Academy has ever produced.

Best Navy Team in Years.

The team, as it will begin the Army game, with the weight of each player is: Hamilton, 156, left end; Douglas, 189, left tackle; Wright, left guard, 181; Weems, centre, 165; Brown, right guard, 204; Loftin, 183, right tackle; Gilchrist, 168, right end; Sewell, 167, quarterback; Dalton, 180, left halfback; Clay, 169, right halfback; Rodes, 170, fullback.

There is a possibility that Davis, 176, may take the place of Douglas, and that McReavey, 180, may be substituted for either Dalton or Rodes. The average of the team is ahead of any Navy team for years.

The game on November 26 will be the fourteenth which has taken place between the elevens of the two service schools. Of the previous contests, the Army has won seven, the Navy six, and one has been a tie.

Of the fourteen, all but three were splendidly contested, and no marked superiority was indicated by either team. None of the previous games was anticipated with so much interest or with so much promise of keen sport.

FISHER TO LEAD HARVARD ELEVEN

R. T. Fisher, the big Crimson guard, is the most likely man to be elected to lead Harvard on the gridiron next year. L. D. Smith, "Ted" Frothingham and Wigglesworth are also in line for the honor.

Fisher has played at guard two years, and last year, as this, was one of the mainstays of the Crimson line. He is an aggressive player and a stone wall on the defence. This season he is in line for an All-American guard position, as his work in both the Dartmouth and Yale games was beyond reproach. Fisher's home is in Dorchester. He prepared for Harvard at Andover. He weighs 195 pounds and is twenty-two years of age.

Harvard's failure to defeat Yale, when the records of the two elevens, the opinions of critics and a statistical comparison pointed to a Crimson victory, casts a shadow upon the prospects of next year's team. Four of the regular linemen, two of the backs and two strong substitutes, graduate next June. In 1911 Coach Haughton will be without the services of eight "H" men, six of whom were regulars of great ability.

Heavy Blow to Harvard.

The loss of these, especially the linemen, will be sorely felt, for among the substitutes and on the freshmen eleven are no such powerful players.

But though the prospects are not as encouraging as at the beginning of the past season, they are by no means discouraging. From the substitutes on Captain Withington's squad and the material offered by the class of 1914, an eleven of at least average strength should be formed. Coach Haughton's knowledge of the game, the high standard of the varsity substitutes and the quality of the freshman team, all point to the fact that, while a team of such as this year's may not be produced, a combination will be formed which will again prove a worthy opponent for Yale.

The "H" men who will be available are: Fisher, right guard; B. D. Smith, right end; Lewis, left end; Potter, Wigglesworth and Gardner, quarterbacks; Wendell, "Ted" Frothingham, Campbell and Felton, halfbacks; Morrison, fullback. In addition, Amory, Keays, Parmenter, Tryon, Graustein, T. H. Frothingham and Huntington, members of this year's squad, will be available. Of these players, Huntington is a likely candidate for centre, Keays for guard, Graustein for half, and Tyron and T. H. Frothingham for fullback.

Lewis and L. D. Smith will fill the end positions with credit.

Wigglesworth and Potter or Gardner will probably alternate at quarterback, as this year. Campbell, Wendell, Morrison, Graustein, "Ted" Frothingham, Tryon and T. H. Frothingham, with Reynolds, Chatfield, Beetle or Sortwell from the freshman eleven, will form strong backfield combinations.

Fisher Only Veteran.

The problem presented by the vacancies in the line, however, is serious. Fisher is the only veteran. The positions around him must be filled by Huntington, centre; Keays, Stow and F. H. Leslie, guards, members of the varsity squad; and Kitchknock, Storer, Bliss, Willetts and Captain Gardiner of the freshman team. The last named is the only tackle available. These players may develop into as capable linesmen as those lost this year, but the problem will be far more difficult than this Fall.

SPIRITED OPENING AT BIG HORSE AUCTION

With the greatest assembly of horsemen present in the sale's history, the sixteenth annual Old Glory horse auction, under the auspices of the Fasig-Tipton Company, opened at Madison Square Garden, New York, to continue through Saturday night.

The leading fixed sale of record light harness horses that the world annually enjoys attracts uncommon interest this year, both by reason of the quantity and quality of horses listed, both trotters and pacers, that are within the 2:30 list, and by reason of the fact that all the leading horsemen of America and Europe who patronize the light harness horse are on hand.

It will require an entire week to dispose upon the auction block the entire number of 842 horses that are to be offered, and there is also a supplemental list in the consignment of horses, the notice of which arrived too late to be properly classified in the catalogue.

The inimitable auctioneer, George A. Bain, he of the merry quip and jest, and one of the country's most interesting men, presides as usual, and there are no chances of a somnambulists' congress or exhibitions of sleep walking with George upon the block.

Many Stars Go by Board.

To-day was featured by the sale of W. J. Bradley's Ardmaer Farm consignment, including the progeny of the former great New England sire Bingen (2:06¼) and Guy Axworthy (4) (2:08¾).

To-morrow will see the dispersal sale of the Clairborne Farm, headed by the great stallion Director General, by Director (2:17), dam Winifrede, by William L.

Featured also upon the second day will be the sale of the horses consigned by Governor Horace White of New York, Alonzo McDonald, McElwain, Hudson River and Empire stock farms, W. L. Snow and others.

On Wednesday the feature of the day will be a practical dispersal of the horses of Shulthurst Farm, with a grand collection of young stallions, great brood mares and phenomenal young trotters. Also the horses of Captain David Shaw, President Harry K. Devereaux of the Grand Circuit, E. S. Burke and many others.

Thanksgiving day will be the feature day of the Old Glory sale, when will be offered the greatest stallion sold in many years, the famous Kentucky sire The Bondsman, the sterling son of Baron Wilkes and Sorrento, by Grand Sentinel.

The price bid for this sire of Colorado E. (2:04¾), the world's champion three-year-old trotter, and of The Plunger (4) (2:07¼), the second fastest four-year-old stallion of 1910; Grace Bond (3) (2:09¼), winner of both divisions of the Kentucky Futurity, and C. W. Lasell's Boston trotter Creighton (2:08¼).

Big Holiday List.

Silent Brigade (2) (2:10¾), the son of Silent Brook (2:16½), will be the second splendid offering, a colt who surely looks to be in line for the three-year-old trotting championship.

And lastly, for the third feature of the horseman's feast Thanksgiving Day, comes the sale of D. W. Caton's great New England four-year-old trotting mare Belvsia, 2:12¾, the best 2:12 stake trotter in sight in this country. Boston and New England horsemen are thoroughly familiar with the whirlwind campaign of this sweet-going mare, who won nine consecutive races and lost but a single heat, and who at Hills Grove in September defeated Scientia, 2:11¼, in the greatest speculated race we have seen in this part of the country for many years.

Belvsia, as is well known, is a bay daughter of Bingara, dam Persea by Pistachio (p), 2:21¾, and she will bring a very swell figure at the Old Glory sale unless all signs fail.

The Friday sale will include the dispersal of the horses of the Riverside Park Farm, headed by the noted Baronmore, 2:14¼, while on Saturday, the closing day, will consist of a general sale of high-grade material.

Boston Consignments.

Among the consignors of Greater Boston are: Arnold Lawson, who is sending over the bay trotting mare Dreamwold Neon, by Dexter Prince; George F. Leonard, the Summer street wool merchant, who consigns his two-year-old Barella, by Bingara; Pauline, a three-year-old filly by Bingen, 2:06¼, and Glenola, a three-year-old filly by Glenesk; J. W. Brodbine of Columbus avenue, who will sell Baron Sentinel, a two-year-old colt by Baron Review, 2:21¼; D. W. Caton of Foxboro, who besides Belvasia 2:12¼, will offer the mixed gaited Future Todd, by Todd, trial 2:14, pacing.

Walter R. Cox of Dover, who offers the trotters Melva J., 2:10½, Bisa, 2:10¼, Betsey G., 2:10¼, Alleco Moko, a three-year-old filly by Moko, Noma, 2:18½, by Walnut Hall, 2:08¼, Orosa, a two-year-old filly by Ozono, Gov. Wentworth, 2:18¼, by Ashland Wilkes, 2:17¼.

Abe Johnson of Brockton, who offers the trotters Ichabod Horne by Bingen 2:06¼, and George M. 2:14¾ by Baron Star; William La Croix of Lynn, who offers the popular matinee trotter The Sallorman 2:14¼, by Lookaway 2:22½, one of the most popular contenders in amateur events that New England has known; M. McDermott of the Dorchester Gentlemen's Driving Club who consigns his well known trotter Klondike 2:18½, by Quartermaster 2:21¼; Hugh Milam of Readville, who offers the trotter Rebecca G. 2:11¼, by In Fact; John O'Connor of this city who offers the trotter Peggy Baron by Baron Wilkes 2:18, and a bay yearling filly by Cochato (3) 2:11½.

Queen Direct on Boards.

A. S. Rodney of Lowell, who will sell the well-known pacing mare Queen Direct, 2:15¼, by Direct Hal 2:04¼, who was very prominent this year over New England half-mile tracks, and Harry Wood of Wellesley, who sells the bay trotter Octavio 2:15¾, trial 2:11¼, by Bellini 2:13¼, well known in the races of the Metropolitan Driving Club at the Charles River speedway.

The Old Glory Sale will be attended by a large number of Boston and New England horsemen, and the number of trotters and pacers owned in Boston should be materially increased with many local buyers on the ground.

DENIES GOV.-ELECT BOUGHT THE DOVES

PITTSBURG, Nov. 21.—"It is an untruth, out of the whole cloth, malicious untruth," said John P. Harris, new owner of the Boston Club of the National League, at his home in Crafton, when showed a message from Philadelphia to the effect that Gov.-elect John K. Tener of Pennsylvania was the man who furnished the money to buy the stock of President Dovey recently and that Tener will have a dominating influence next season at Boston.

"Mr. Tener, while a good friend of mine has nothing to do with the purchase of the Boston Club stock from Mr. Dovey," continued Harris. "I bought the stock and paid for it out of my own money. I alone bought this stock and I paid for it.

TUFTS TEAM LOSES SEVEN OF ITS STARS

With the Tufts-Holy Cross game last Saturday, seven of Tuft's standbys ended their football career. They are Captain Ireland, the old Somerville High star, who has played centre four years; Dittrick, last year's captain and one of the team's best gainers; Bohlin, the little red-headed quarterback; Dunn, left end; Costanza, left tackle; Nason, half and fullback; Stevens, backfield substitute, and Winship, who filled Captain Ireland's position at centre during his injury and also played guard.

CORNELL NAMES MEN TO BATTLE PENNSY

WALSH AND ATTELL BATTLE WEDNESDAY

Jimmy Walsh is to meet Monte Attell at Kansas City on Wednesday. The Boston boy is boxing in better form to-day than he has in some time, and while he will have to step fast against the Californian, he is all prepared, and expects to be returned a winner. Walsh has defeated Attell, but since that time Attell is said to have improved, and is in a fair way to carry the Boston boy along at a much faster pace than before.

N. Y. CHESS EXPERT WINS 5TH OF SERIES

BERLIN, Nov. 21.—Emanuel Lasker of New York won the fifth game of the championship chess match against D. Janowski of Paris here. Lasker selected a queen's pawn opening, to which Janowski could offer scarcely any resistance. Present score—Lasker, 3; drawn, 2; Janowski, 0.

The fifth having ended so quickly, the players decided to devote four hours to the sixth contest of the series, which was opened by Janowski with a queen's gambit, Lasker declining to take the gambit pawn. An adjournment was made in an even position after thirty moves. This game will be concluded to-morrow.

HAL CHAFIN PACES 3 RECORD HEATS

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 21.—What horsemen say is a record for three half-mile heats in a race was made here by Hal Chafin, owned by Theodore Sternemann, in the free-for-all pace at Washington Park. The first two heats were stepped in 1:02¼ and the third in 1:02¼.

Lost Hair
Never Come Back. Here's a Remedy That Stops Hair Falling and Promotes New Hair Growth.

You can't begin any too soon using Lorrimer's Excelsior Hair Tonic. Everyone should use it. Those with beautiful hair need it to keep the hair clean, healthy and well nourished; those whose hair is going need it to stop its falling, and to restore its youthful gloss and beauty. Here's a long letter, but it's well worth reading:

The Hair Tonic (Lorrimer's) has done more than I ever expected. When I started, my hair was rough and brittle, full of dandruff, and was falling out by the handfuls. My scalp itched very much. Under treatment of the Hair Tonic, the hair has become fine and silky, my scalp has stopped itching and the hair has regained its original color. I am not in favor of allowing my name to be used in advertising medicines, but in this case I believe I can stretch a point because your Hair Tonic is an article of genuine merit, and deserves to be better known.

BOSTON STRONG FOR LYNCH'S RE-ELECTION

President Lynch of the National League refuses to say whether he intends to be a candidate for re-election, assuming the attitude that he never sought the position, was practically pitchforked into it and that it is up to the men who brought him from New Britain to New York to say whether he shall continue in the baseball business or go back to his home town and lend all his energy to booming the Rosswyn Lyceum Theatre of that city.

Lynch at heart is a demon baseball fan. He loves the national game, though he is not fond of the way that its followers occasionally behave. Thomas Joseph, after his election, confessed he was surprised that the magnates of the senior organization had picked him out to be the president of the National League and announced that he would do his best to justify their choice.

Lynch, when he took his seat in the presidential chair, frankly acknowledged that he did not know everything about the duties of the position to which he had been elected. Last December he said he hoped that when the magnates of the National League met this Winter the consensus of opinion about his occupancy of the presidential chair would be that he had made good.

Lynch, in a year's time, did not expect that he would earn for himself the title of "King of Presidents," but he is more or less satisfied in his own mind that he hasn't been a gigantic fiasco as an executive and wonders whether or not his employers and the public agree with him in his contention.

Lynch, should he go out electioneering for votes, easily could gain sufficient to insure his retention in office, but he has refused to lay any plans for the future and is waiting to let the magnates either fire him or re-engage him. That is Lynch's present attitude, and he refuses to swerve from it.

Lynch undoubtedly will be re-elected to the presidency of the National League at the meeting to be held in New York next month, and will not have to turn a hand in order to succeed himself. His administration has pleased most of the magnates. John T. Brush, president of the New York Club, is satisfied with the Lynch regime, and so are Barney Dreyfuss, president of the Pirates; Garry Herrmann, owner of the Reds, and John F. Harris, the majority shareholder of the Pittsburg and Boston Clubs. Under the revised constitution of the National League, Lynch can retain the presidency if he gets four votes, which he now is sure of.

Garry Herrmann, president of the Cincinnati Club, however, is not satisfied with the thought that only a deadlock between the magnates may be the reason for Lynch continuing in office, and will shortly start a movement to have Thomas Joseph re-elected for a term of three years. The owner of the Reds is satisfied that Lynch has made good as president, and will work like a trojan in order to keep him in the National League's employ.

Garry Booms Lynch.

Garry has announced that he will spend a week in Atlantic City prior to the National League meeting, and that he will reach New York December 12 in the pink of condition and ready to fight to the limit for the retention in office of the present executive.

Herrmann has openly come out and said that Lynch has been a success as president of the National League, and John T. Brush, owner of the Giants, is of the same opinion, though he has not proclaimed this fact from the housetops. Dreyfuss of Pittsburg and Harris of Boston are two other magnates who will line up with Brush and Herrmann and help to re-elect Lynch.

All season long it was understood that Charles H. Ebbets of Brooklyn, Charles W. Murphy of Chicago and Horace S. Fogel of Philadelphia were against Lynch continuing in the presidential chair. M. Stanley Robison of St. Louis has not openly said whether he was for or against Lynch, though it is well known that in the early part of the campaign the Mound City magnate was one of the men who thought that Thomas Joseph was a colossal joke as an executive. It is hinted that Robison has changed his opinion since.

Lynch just now is standing on his record. He refuses to come out and say whether he wants to be re-elected, thinking that as he did not seek the position he now occupies it is up to the men who brought him from New Britain to New York to tell him first whether or not he has been a success.

BATTLING NELSON TO TACKLE OWEN MORAN

Battling Nelson and Owen Moran, the English lightweight, meet at San Francisco next Saturday in a twenty-round contest. Many still believe that the Dane will yet regain his lost title. There are fight fans in this vicinity who still believe that Nelson is the lightweight champion, despite his loss to Wolgast, and it is freely predicted that he will win over the Michigan boxer should they ever meet again.

RED SOX HITTER IN HONOR CLASS

Red Sox players hold high rank among the distance batters of the American, according to the official figures made public to-day. Stahl leads in home run drives and Hooper in sacrifice hits.

The official averages place Joe Jackson of Cleveland at the head of the list, with an average of .387 in twenty games.

The Cobb-Lajoie mixup is straightened out with .385 for the Detroiter and .384 for the Clevelander, and to these two, in this order, go the batting honors of the league. Speaker follows Lajoie with .340, and Eddie Collins, Jack Knight, Oldring, Easterly and Danny Murphy are next among the regulars.

Of the first twenty batsmen, including the recruits who made good with the stick at the fag end of the season, the Athletics have five, Cleveland five, Boston, Detroit and New York three each and Washington one, the latter being Cunningham, a recruit from the New England League.

In long hitting by teams, Boston leads the league with a total of 479 extra bases, Athletics follow with 468 and Detroit is third with 422. No other team lifted its extra base total above 400. In long hits by individuals, Cobb is the leader with 86 extra bases, Stahl of Boston is second with 81, Crawford third with 79, Lajoie fourth with 77, Murphy fifth with 76, Speaker sixth with 69. Stahl leads the league in home runs with ten. Lewis and Cobb are tied for second honors with eight. Crawford was the star three-base hitter, having recorded 19, while Murphy and Lord of the Athletics tied at 18. In doubles, Lajoie was the season's king, having a lead of 51 to 36 over Cobb, Lewis of Boston being third with 29.

The team records show that Boston led in home runs with 44, and the Athletics hold first place in three and two-base hitting with marks of 103 and 208 respectively.

TOM LONGBOAT HERE TO RACE AL SHRUBB

Tom Longboat, the Onondaga Indian and holder of the record for the B. A. A. Marathon course, is in town to-day. Longboat is to race Alfred Shrubb fifteen miles in Mechanics Hall Thursday night and will do road work in the Back Bay Fens between now and the night of the race. The Indiana claims to be in shape and claims confidence in his ability to defeat Shrubb in a fifteen mile race.

Shrubb has been down in Maine, training for this race. The Englishman has been running with the Harvard cross-country runners all Fall and claims that his weak leg does not bother him in the least.

PITCHER ROWAN THE GOODS FOR QUAKERS

Jack Rowan, the pitcher traded to Philadelphia in the latest Red deal, should, if past performances count for anything, be a wonder when it comes to pitching for the Philadelphia team. Rowan has never lost a game on the Philadelphia grounds since he entered the big league, and this is looked upon by ball players as an omen of good for the Quaker team.

RACE HORSES BURNED IN BIG STABLE FIRE

WICHITA, Kan., Nov. 21.—Forty-five race horses, valued at $30,000, were burned in the stables of the Wichita & Southwestern Fair Association. The horses were in winter quarters after a racing season on the fair circuits of Kansas and Oklahoma.

The stables, which were destroyed, were valued at $12,000. A further loss of $10,000 was due to the burning of racing carts, harness and other accessories.

SCHOOL TEAMS DIVIDE TITLES ON THURSDAY

The climax of the schoolboy football campaign of 1910 is at hand. Thanksgiving Day the final curtain will be dropped in a blaze of glory with all of the big school elevens meeting old rivals to settle gridiron supremacy.

There are several games down on the schedule which will settle the championships of different leagues, and the results are liable to be surprising with many upsets among the top notchers.

The game that is attracting the most attention from the local fans is the one between Dorchester High and Mechanic Arts to take place at the Dunbar Avenue Grounds, Dorchester. The result of this game will settle the championship of the Boston High School League as neither of these teams have as yet met defeat in any of their league games.

Dorchester has been defeated but once this Fall, its only setback coming on last Saturday when Quincy High defeated it by the score of 11 to 0. The probable loss of Captain "Chick" Fraser, who was severely injured in the game on last Saturday, will be a serious handicap for the Dorchester team to overcome, inasmuch as the blonde headed leader has been playing a remarkably fine game all season, his great individual work winning game after game for Coach O'Reilly's charges.

Battle of Old Rivals.

In Mechanic Arts, Dorchester will meet a worthy foe, an eleven which is trained to the minute and ready to put up the battle of a life time. At the opening of the season the prospects for a winning team were none too bright at the Back Bay school. As the season advanced the team improved in leaps and bounds until now it is considered among the best school elevens.

This was clearly demonstrated by its decisive victory over the High School of Commerce, which team in turn took the speedy English High School eleven into camp easily the following week.

Next to the Dorchester-Mechanic Arts game in importance is the great annual clash between English High and Boston Latin which will take place at the American League grounds at 10 a. m. This game will bring out the usual large holiday crowd which is always on hand when these ancient rivals clash in any kind of sport.

At the present time it appears as though, when the smoke of battle finally blows over, that Boston Latin should be returned the winner as the English High team has not been playing in its true form of late.

Latin in Fine Form.

On the other hand, the men coached by Fred O'Brien are in the best of condition and playing in excellent form. This can be easily seen by taking a glance at the record of the Latin School boys for the season. Throughout the season Latin has had remarkable success, winning game after game with apparent ease over the strongest of opponents.

One of the chief reasons for Latin School's success had been the fine generalship qualities shown by Mal Logan, Latin's speedy quarterback, whose cool head in the pinches has guided the Latin School eleven to several victories when things were looking rather dubious.

One of the pleasing features in the work of the local high school teams this season has been the fine all-around playing of Captain "Steve" Moran of the High School of Commerce. Moran is by far the best football player which the Fenway School has yet turned out. In the greater number of its games this season Moran has generally played the stellar role.

As a line-plunger Moran has a few equals among the schoolboy backs. This was no more clearly demonstrated than in the English High game when Moran tore through the Light and the Dark Blue line time after time for long gains. On one occasion he went through the Montgomery's eleven line for a thirty yard run for a touchdown.

Moran is also expert in the use of the forward pass, his adaptability at this scientific method of attack going a great ways in playing his team among the foremost ranks of the schoolboy pigskin chasers.

A battle royal is promised Thanksgiving Day when Somerville High and Rindge Manual Training School meet on Broadway Field, Somerville. These two elevens are considered among the best in the State. In the case of a Rindge victory the University City schoolboys will be in line to challenge Malden High for the school title as these two elevens are without doubt the best in the State.

The "Cantabs" will probably go into the fray without the services of Frank Scully, who is on the crippled list. With the old St. John's star out of the game the Cambridge team will be at a great disadvantage as Scully's long quarterback runs and excellent running off of plays has been a factor in the playing of Rindge all season.

MELVIN WILLIAMS

I am rather sorry to announce my last advertisement of the Fall season for Gale & Kent, because I really enjoy writing their copy. Every thing at 96 Court Street is enjoyable—from the joy of having clothes made there to the joy of working for the firm in any capacity whatever. The operators in the workrooms are happy—month in and month out—because their positions are secure—no lay-offs—no discharges—everything smooth all the time.

Business is run on a system at Gale & Kent's. That is why this is the last advertisement. My appropriation is gone with today's ad.

The season has been a very successful one—the increase in business being larger than any Fall season for 18 years.

I want everybody responsible to feel that the firm of Gale & Kent are appreciative for this tribute to their integrity—their skill as tailors—their reputation as a business house. They have asked me to make this free acknowledgment of their indebtedness to the buying public of Boston.

I rather think that's about all there is to this ad except that I wish everybody a pleasant Thanksgiving, a Merry Christmas and a very Happy New Year.

And don't forget that Gale & Kent are open all the year 'round at 96 Court Street, making Suits (or Overcoats) at $15 to $25—guaranteed in every way—fit, style, workmanship and wear.

ALL-STAR CARD AT ARMORY A. A.

An all-star show is the bill to-morrow night at the Armory A. A. The members should see some good bouts, as the boys, although not stars, are pretty classy performers in the ring.

Kyle Whitney, the colored middleweight of California, who is pretty clever, tackles Christy Williams, who is under the management of Tom O'Rourke, in a ten-round bout. Williams, according to O'Rourke, is fast on his feet and clever with his hands.

Jeff Madden, the South Boston heavyweight who boxed a draw with Tommy Ryan's protege, Con O'Kelley, meets Andy Morris in one of the eight-round contests. While neither man is a wonder it will be a good bout while the contest lasts.

Johnny Gallant, the little ex-national amateur champion featherweight, meets Billy Burke of South Boston. They boxed a warm bout at the club a couple of weeks ago and Gallant won out, when it looked bad for him. Both are stiff punchers.

A. J. Duffy, another ex-amateur champion who has done well since he joined the upper division, meets his old rival Tom Foley of South Boston. As the bout is to be a couple of rounds longer than they boxed before there is likely to be a winner between them this time.

Johnny Glover meets Mike McIntyre of St. John in the other bout. McIntyre is a rugged boxer and, though Glover is shifty and clever, he will find the St. John boy a hard customer to keep 'way from.

Can a Woman Win a Man?

By DOROTHY DIX

A YOUNG woman writes to me that she is possessed of unusual attractions of mind and body, and yet she is the victim of an unhappy love affair. Other men admire her, but not the one whose admiration she craves. Other men ask her to marry them, but not the one whose wife she would like to be. He alone remains indifferent to her charms, and she wants to know if there is any way by which she can win him.

Thackeray has declared that any woman, without an actual hump on her back, can marry any man she chooses, and to a degree this statement seems to be borne out. Every day we see determined women leading cowed and subjected men to the altar, and a fairly large per cent. of husbands, if asked suddenly to tell why they married the particular woman they did, would be constrained to reply that they didn't marry at all, they were married.

Love himself is not always able to strike the heart he should.

Woman's Trade Secret

How the women do this is their own trade secret, that they refuse to give away. Probably the successful female hunters were women who were clever enough to make studies of their victims' habits and tastes, and were thus enabled to lay traps into which the unsuspecting men stumbled.

Undeniably there are men—and we could name their names if we were cattish enough to do so—who were fed into matrimony. There are others who were bluffed into it, and others who were wept into it. Sometimes a woman runs after a man until she finally catches him. Sometimes she piques a man into asking her to marry him by throwing a hated rival in his face and arousing the dog in the manger spirit in him. Sometimes a woman works on a man's sympathies until he marries her for pity, and, again, there are plenty of women who simply purchase a husband with cold, hard cash.

There are many ways of marrying a man, but to make a man love you is an entirely different matter, and I doubt if there is anything that a woman can really do to win a man's love. Love is a gift of the gods, bestowed or withheld, fantastically, whimsically, without regard to rhyme or reason.

Love Not Explainable

No man on earth knows why he loves; why some particular woman attracts him and another leaves him indifferent; why his pulses thrill at the very rustle of one woman's skirts and he would not turn his head to look at another, though she sat by his side all day; why the cold, commonplace word of one woman is treasured in his memory, while he forgets the passionate devotion of another. It is a question of nature, of personal magnetism, of that strange instinct of selection that we do not understand, however much we may recognize it.

A woman's worth, her intelligence, her looks even have very little to do with a man's falling in love with her, and so it is in vain that she adorns herself for him or stands around in a stained-glass attitude. If she has for him the mysterious attraction that is the real inspiration of all love he will seek her out with all of her faults upon her head, and if she has no magnetism for him he will pass her by though she were the embodiment of all the virtues.

Nor can any man fall in love to order. If we could there would be very many more suitable and happy marriages in the world, because many a man sees in a woman the kind of a wife that he knows he should marry, but he simply cannot bring himself to follow his head instead of his heart in the matter.

How One Man Expressed It

In speaking of such a case a man said not long ago to me: "I have never worked as hard at anything in my life as I have at trying to fall in love with Sally. She is everything in the world that comes up to my ideal of a perfect woman, good looking, gracious, well bred, intelligent, industrious, domestic, entertaining and charming. I enjoy her society, but to save my life I can't get up one throb of sentiment over her.

"Is it not ghastly to think how much the sport of fate we are in such matters? I cannot love this good woman that I so admire, and yet the chances are that some day I shall go crazy over some weak, vain little fool, and marry her, and she will make me miserable ever after. But I am helpless to love, as I shall be powerless to keep from loving when I meet the one Woman."

It is one of the most pathetic things in life that we cannot win love, nor recall it when we have lost it, any more than we could a wilding bird that has escaped from our hand.

This is what makes so heart rendingly futile the efforts of women to hold men who have tired of them. The girl whose sweetheart has grown indifferent to her, and who neglects her, tries to draw him back to her by her tears and prayers, by her abasement of herself before him, by her frantic clinging to him. The wife whose husband has ceased to care for her, who has become cold and callous to her, seeks by a thousand little coquetries, by trying to make herself look young again, by attempting to surround him with more home comforts to turn him once more into the lover.

Affection Not to Be Compelled

Vain hope! The fire is out on the altar and you cannot kindle into flame the dead ashes. When the illusive something that attracted a man to a woman is gone from her for him it is like a lost perfume, or the effervescence of a bottle of champagne. You cannot resist it. Probably—nay doubtless—in most cases the man regrets the lost attraction just as much and as bitterly as the woman does. It is as great a tragedy to the man to cease to love the woman he has chosen as it is to her to cease to be loved, but he cannot compel his affection, nor force himself to thrill because it is his duty to thrill at his wife's kiss.

Therefore, with sorrow I say to my correspondent, that there is no known system by which she can break the bank of love. It is a game that has no rules, and in which precedents do not count. It is the greatest gamble on earth, which is the reason that men and women never tire of staking their all upon it.

Accomplishment

Is this the end of labor? In the street
A horse has fallen. Near him stands his load!
A high piled truck, not more inert than he,
Amid the clanking teams; the roar of traffic.
Is this the end, O you who bear the yoke—
Or man or beast—or shall your work become Part of the great work done, the huge wheels turned;
Iron and stone in mighty fabrics reared
As though some age of Titans were at hand.

How can it be a living thing, he's dead
There in the street, fallen beneath it's load
And all things move, the motors whirling by;
The very air surmounted by vast wings?
And, though in all these things he had a part,
Is this his best reward, or may it be
Nature rewards him thus at last with rest,
And now no more the collar galls his neck,
Nor in his mouth he feels the cutting bit,
Nor on his back the lash; and not again,
In all the ages, shall there ever come
Memories of this to him. It is as though
He and the life he lived had never been.

But you who toil who are not beasts, but men,
Whom no lash drives, shall you free labor claim
No better end? Behold for you the mind
Assumes the leadership in all your work,
Great purposes prevail, and though your toil
Seem base and mean, your soul may round it throw
The gleam of some angelic task,
Proclaiming high fulfilment. Wealth and fame
Seem small indeed when death divests the soul.
The naked soul with these things is not clothed.
It cometh unadorned, but none the less
The stars shall greet it, and about its way
Sun beyond sun eternal heaven flames.

☘ Married Life the First Year ☘

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

The Baby's Bath.

IT was Sunday morning. And Sunday morning was always a difficult time. Everyone got up later and the machinery of the household seemed never to run quite smooth.

While on week days Warren was off to his office by 9, on Sundays he rarely got up until 10. But instead of the longer rest being beneficial, it seemed only to make him more irritable.

And this morning it was raining, which kept him from his accustomed morning walk and added to his irritability.

Of the four Sunday papers which he always took only three had been delivered that morning. The irregularity in the delivery of papers had been frequent of late, and now he started into the nursery to complain to Helen about it. (Whatever went wrong he somehow always managed to make her feel responsible.) As he opened the door he found the room stifling hot and close, with the radiator sputtering loudly in the corner.

"By George! What are you trying to make of this room—a hothouse?"

Warren Remonstrates

Helen was kneeling before the lower drawer of the chiffonier, laying out some fresh clothes for the baby.

"Oh, Warren, shut the door—we're getting ready for the baby's bath."

"Well, it'll be a steam bath in this room—why, it's sickening."

"Warren, don't stand there talking and keeping that door open. Either come in or out—but shut the door!"

But Warren stood obstinately still, holding the door open. "Don't you know such heat as this isn't good for anyone? Why, the child will be sick if you bathe it in here."

"And it will have the croup if you keep that door open!"

"No it won't. What are you trying to make of it, anyway—a hot-house plant? I tell you, right now, I'm not going to have any child of mine raised that way. I want a rugged, hardy, healthy child—not a frail, sickly, pampered thing."

"But this is a baby, Warren—a little baby! You can't begin"——

"Oh yes you can—you can't begin too soon. Accustom it now to plenty of fresh air—don't weaken it in a room like this."

His Emphatic Action

"I suppose you'd advise an ice bath with all the windows open?"

"Well, by Jove, I'm not so sure even that wouldn't be better than this."

"Oh," wearily, "what do you know about a baby's bath? Please shut that door and go away—it will take half an hour to get the room warm again. I've been bathing it every morning so far, without your suggestions, and I think I can dispense with them now."

This was a mistake, and she knew it, but he had been irritable all morning, and her own patience was almost at an end.

"You can, eh?" angrily. "Well, I guess right here is where my suggestions take effect." And he strode across the room and turned off the sizzling radiator. "Now, if that baby is to be bathed this morning, it is to be done in a moderately warm, well ventilated room, and not in this wilting heat."

Helen disdained to answer this and went on laying out the baby's clothes with elaborate care.

Her silence only served to further irritate him.

"Do you hear what I say? Since I am the father of this child, I propose to have some voice in its bringing up!"

Here the telephone bell rang shrilly. With a muttered exclamation he went in to answer it.

With flushed cheeks Helen was still bending over the clothes when he came to the door again.

"Jim Weston wants me to go out to the Country Club to play golf. The rain's about stopped now," he spoke with a careful attempt at carelessness. "We'll have lunch out there and I can easily get back for dinner."

Her Sigh of Relief

"Why, yes. Why don't you go?" stiffly.

"I'm—I think I will."

He went into his room, got into his golf suit, strapped his sticks, and with a strained and perfunctory "Goodby, I'd be back around seven," hurried off. The subject of their controversy was entirely ignored.

When the door banged after him, Helen went back into the nursery, turned on the radiator, which promptly renewed its sputtering. Then she carefully closed all the doors, and with a sigh of relief proceeded with the baby's bath.

His Business Was Boosting

By KENNETT HARRIS

ONE of the penalties of suburban life is the man from town who comes to make you a week-end visit and indulges in little pleasantries at the expense of the suburb.

He sees Jim Rickard with his star on and remarks: "I notice that your police force is out on parade to-day." He asks you how you manage to get the sand burrs all picked off your trousers every morning in the short time that it takes the 7:30 express to reach the city.

He wants to know what you are supposed to do when you find a cow lying across the sidewalk—shoo her off or step over her. He expresses awed surprise at the arc light on Main street.

He doesn't mean to be offensive, perhaps, but he gets on the suburban's nerves terribly, and his name is Legion, and then some. So the visit of Mr. Silkenson of Pittsburg to Bibberley Heights was something of an event. There was a man with gumption, who knew a good thing when he saw it.

At Heatherdale, Griffin said: "The next stop is Bibberley. Three minutes." Presumably Mr. Silkenson did not hear him. He was gazing out of the window with a rapt expression. When we were well out of Heatherdale he turned to us and said, solemnly and emphatically: "Gentlemen, this is a marvelously beautiful region we are approaching. Marvelously beautiful! May I ask if Bibberley is far from here?"

A Glow of Admiration

"We're just about there," replied Griffin. "Those wooded knolls you see just ahead are the heights."

Mr. Silkenson's complexion was naturally florid, but the pink in his face seemed to be nothing more or less than a glow of admiration as he ejaculated an explosive "Gosh!" The next moment we were gathering up our packages and in a minute more we had debarked.

"Here," said Mr. Silkenson, "is a station that is a station. The man who built this was an architect and an artist. Mission of the purest design! Trim lawns! Flower beds! And the shrubbery—lilacs, if I mistake not, and catalpas, and, er—everything the most fastidious taste could demand. Why don't all railroads build stations like this one? A man would be glad to wait for a train at a place like this. He would wait hours and enjoy every minute of them. I suspect, however, that the enterprise of the citizens here had something to do with the construction of this little oasis."

"Our village improvement society cooperates, certainly," said Griffin, with a gratified smile. "Yes, we are a little proud of our station."

Griffin's Proud Humility

"I never laid eyes on a prettier," declared Mr. Silkenson. "My gracious! Look at those stores! Why, stores like these would be a credit to the finest shopping district in any large city. A roadway of pressed brick, too! Mr. Griffin, this is an eye-opener for me."

"Of course the business part of the place is limited," said Griffin, with proud humility. "Still it is sufficient for our small needs. That is our little city hall at the end of the block. The building on the hill east is our school house."

"You don't tell me!" said Mr. Silkenson. "I thought it must be the residence of some wealthy citizen. A school house! Well, well! There is nothing too good for the rising generation of Bibberley Heights; that's quite apparent. Rather different that from the little red school house of our boyhood's days—what? The thing that strikes one here, gentlemen, is not only the picturesque beauty of the buildings themselves, but the way in which they blend into and set off their surroundings. They seem to be constructed with a special view to their environment, which is as rare in most places as it is refreshing."

We proceeded in this manner to Griffin's house, Mr. Silkenson pausing every few steps to allow some of his bubbling appreciation to escape him. Every bush, every boulder, the green of a cabbage patch, the careless rusticity of a back fence, the taper of the Methodist church spire—everything elicited some new expression of pleasure. He refused to enter Griffin's gate at once, but begged our indulgence while he contemplated what seemed to him to be an absolutely ideal home.

"An Eden Unspoiled"

"More pretentious edifices I have seen, I don't deny," he said, with the candor that he had told us was a part of his character, "but a more charming, more artistic, more homelike and complete residence I have never seen, sir."

He repeated this to Mrs. Griffin, who welcomed us at the door with the young Griffins clustered at her skirts. "Your husband, madam," he added, "has already given me such a treat as I have not experienced at any time before in my recollection, and I may say that I have traveled somewhat extensively here and abroad. A delightful place, madam, an Eden unspoiled. The natural loveliness of the country combined with all the refinements and conveniences of human ingenuity, I should say."

"You are very kind to say so," said Mrs. Griffin.

"No kindness, madam," rejoined Mr. Silkenson. "An honest and blunt expression of the sentiments of pleasure with which Bibberly Heights has inspired me. To tell you the truth, I though Mr. Griffin's encomiums upon the suburb were probably tinged with the partiality of a resident, and I own that I smiled in my sleeve a little. I have to be candid with you, you know. But I am obliged to say that his description was very feeble indeed. Very feeble."

"And these dear children of yours," he remarked later on. "Bless my soul! Did one ever see such sturdiness, such health, such activity! It really saddens me, madam, to look at them, for I cannot help contrasting them with my own small brood in Pittsburg. Mine are colunted fine children, too. They are fine children, but I would give much if they had the blooming, robust appearance of yours." He sighed deeply and Mrs. Griffin's kind heart went right out to him in sympathy.

He made plenty of money by handing out his bouquets

"He's a Promoter"

There was a nice little dinner of exactly the things that Mr. Silkenson most loved and most seldom got, and afer dinner we climbed to the highest of the heights, a giddy eminence of full sixty feet. Here Mr. Silkenson was quite brusque. "Don't speak to me, please," he said. "I want to drink this undisturbed. Not a word!" He stretched himself out, put his chin on his palms and became lost in a poetic abstraction from all but the scene before him. He was at least five minutes drinking and tore himself away with the keenest regret.

"Well, I must go," he sighed, after we had inspected Griffin's domain. "I shall cherish the hope of returning, though. Mr. Griffin, you are a lucky man. So are you Mr. Jones. Think of living here! Heavens!"

We walked down with him to the station and when the train had pulled out Griffin said to me: "Well, what do you think of him? He strikes me as being a pretty level-headed fellow. A man of good judgment."

"Who is he?" I asked.

"Well, he's a sort of promoter," answered Griffin. "He came to me with letters from some Pittsburg people I know, and he's got a scheme that there ought to be some money in. I think I'll take a little stock in it myself and see if I can't induce my people to. Yes, he's a man knows what's what."

Day's Best Story

FROM the post office steps Freeman Davis watched Professor Lane cross the road and enter the wheelwright's shop on the opposite side.

"Goes in an' out free as you or me," Mr. Davis remarked to Jabez Fewall, "an' nobody knows how many letters he is entitled to write after his name."

Jabez nodded. "But what I can't just make out is how he came by all his smartness. Far's I know, none of his forbears ever amounted to much in a lit'rary way."

"What you talkin' about?" Mr. Davis demanded warmly. "You know's well's I do that his father could spell Nebuchadnezzar quicker'n any other boy in school!"

THE DOUBLE CROSS ☘ ☘ ☘

A Great American Mystery Story by Gilson Willets

Copyright, 1910, by G. W. Dillingham Company

CHAPTER XXVII.

In the Bungalow

THE next morning Felipa appeared at breakfast looking as fresh as the morning glory to which Padre Aurelio had once compared her. I marvelled at her clear eye and rosy cheeks; for she had not gone to bed till after 3 o'clock, that being the hour at which I had found her in the library and made my Great Discovery.

That she had proved to be the woman of the cross had not really surprised me. I had expected it. All the same, it was startling because so mysterious. How my father could have found means to "train" this daughter of Don Justino to be by "paste," puzzled me deeply.

I regarded her now with a kind of awe. She seemed to me a sacred being.

After breakfast, Don Justino and Del Treveno went away to the Don's office to talk business; and Felipa announced that she would go shopping and would, of course, take Swastika with her. At the same time I told the others that I would take a walk about the city, to see more of its wondrous sights.

Felipa, before departing on her shopping tour, came to where I sat reading El Monitor, that Guanajuato newspaper of which Larry Annesley, the stranger's "only friend in the city," was editor.

"I marvel at your perfect physical and mental condition this morning, Felipa. You have had only two or three hours' sleep."

"They tell me, John, that I have the perfect mind and the perfect body—whatever that means."

"Perfect mind and the perfect body!" The very words that Reyes had applied to the woman of the cross.

To the Bungalow

During the night I had decided to let things take their course. I would not tell Felipa what I had learned. I would wait for this secretive senorita to do her own part in her own way. She delayed, I felt sure, because of the stranger in the black mask. She had become entangled with him, and now she was hard put to find a way to extricate herself. Her insistence upon our betrothal served her purpose for a while, for the "trustee" in Mexico City would think that events were progressing in compliance with my father's wishes, all as planned.

"Have you seen the announcement of our betrothal in that newspaper?" she asked.

I scanned the columns eagerly, found the notice.

"I suppose some one in Mexico City will be pleased," I observed.

"Some one in Mexico City?" she cried. "Who?"

Clever girl! Nothing served to catch her off her guard.

After she had started away on her shopping tour with Swastika, I immediately left the house on an errand of my own. I meant to go at once to that bungalow where was the only fountain in Guanajuato, and there confront the stranger and try to discover why he gave me that false warning at the hacienda. I say false, because he had said that Felipa was not the woman I sought.

While strolling about the Alameda, I formulated a plan by which I hoped to compel the stranger to reveal also his identity. And, having decided exactly what I would say to him, I started for the street of Jesus del Monte.

Before reaching the edge of the Alameda, however, I met Swastika.

"You are alone," I said, showing my astonishment. "Where is the senorita?"

"I left her with a friend, senor. Oh—what a surprise she is preparing for you! She is visiting many houses this morning, and you will know the result later in the day."

"But why did she not take you along?—on the visits?"

A Futile Quest

"The cobbles of the streets, senor. She had pity on me. There are no carriages. She makes her visits afoot, so she dismissed me, and I am returning to the house of Senor del Treveno."

I walked slowly down Jesus del Monte, till I came to the bungalow standing far back in the garden behind the fountain.

As I turned into the path leading up between the palms and palmettoes to the front door, my heart gave a great bound. A woman had come to the wire-screen door, had started to push it open as if about to come outdoors—when she saw me.

Instantly she had let the screen door fall back into place by its spring, and at the same time turned her back to me and disappeared.

That woman was Felipa.

No wonder she had dismissed her duenna! She had made straight for the domicile of the stranger in the black mask.

In desperation I rushed up the path. I sprang to the porch, determined to have the whole mystery cleared up once and for all. I would confront Felipa and her lover now, while she was in his house, and have the whole thing over with, compelling Felipa to choose either that man or me then and there, and have done with her deception.

Felipa's Voice

I snatched the open door, bounded in, found myself in a living room artistically furnished. No one was in sight. Doors of other rooms were visible in every direction, all open. Rushing from room to room, through the dining room, the butler's pantry, the library, through two or three bedrooms—I found not a soul.

In the last of the bedrooms I stopped and listened—heard some one whistling. I bounded again through the dining room and this time found the door leading into the kitchen. A Mexican servant stood at the sink, washing dishes. He viewed me with wide-open eyes of astonishment.

And by Heavens! That Mexican was my own body servant.

"Romero!" I exclaimed, as surprised at seeing him there as he apparently was at beholding me. "What are you doing here?"

"Pardon, senor," he said, drying his hands. "You wish to see—the master?"

"I asked you, Romero, what are you doing here? You are in my employ, paid by me and"——

"Pardon, senor, I am employed by the estate of—but I regret, senor, the master sees no one save the Senor Larry Annesley."

"You are my servant," I insisted. "You'll account to me later for being here. Meantime, I order you to take me at once to—the occupant of this house."

"I regret, senor, it is impossible."

"Then I discharge you from my service," I said, red in the face with impotent anger.

He received my words of dismissal, it seemed to me, with an amused smile.

"And I'll remain in this house, camp here, I say, till I see—some one."

Just then an electric bell rang, and the indicator on the kitchen wall said: "Study."

"The master wants me, senor," Romero now said. "Will you be pleased to come into the sitting-room and wait there a moment while I go upstairs to the study?"

Up! I had forgotten that there could be an upstairs to this bungalow, having supposed that all the rooms were on one floor, in usual bungalow style.

Romero mounted the stairs—not hearing me coming up behind him. He knocked on a door, and I heard a voice say: "Enter."

It was the voice I knew so well, the voice that had enthralled me on the steamer—Felipa's voice.

I dashed past the affrighted servant, opened the door myself and entered.

The Mask Imperturable

The stranger, wearing his mask as usual, sat at a table, writing.

Romero discreetly vanished and the stranger turned to me, showing not the least surprise.

"You honor me, John St. John."

He arose and bowed with that indescribable grace of manner I had noted at the hacienda.

"Where is the Senorita Felipa?" I demanded, harshly.

"I have a poor head for enigmas," he replied.

I strode across the room, threateningly.

"Stand still!"

He uttered the warning in a low tone, the tone of a man who knows that he is master of the situation. A flash of steel had diverted my glowering eyes from his face to a stiletto with which he now toyed.

"Go in and Win!"

"It is a beautiful weapon, is it not?" he said very calmly. "See! Is not its handle of gold exquisitely carved? It is quite as deadly, too, as a full-grown machete. You thought to tear the mask from my face? No? Yes?"

"I did. Who are you?"

"I am enjoying the masquerade," he replied.

"I don't doubt your enjoyment," I snapped, thinking, of course of his relations with Felipa. But he pretended not to understand.

In short, he kept his head and I had lost mine. I had entirely forgotten the lines I had intended saying to him.

"How do you come to know me?" I blurted.

He looked at me and smiled and smiled, saying nothing.

"What do you know of me?" I persisted. "Why did you warn me to fly from the hacienda?"

"I said you would lose everything by remaining there, John. Well, you are losing at the rate of—let us say about a hundred thousand a day."

"Will you unmask?" I cried, "or will you compel me to tear the mask from your devilish black eyes the first time I catch you without—that weapon?"

"I will unmask, John—the day you marry." And he tapped his thumb-nail with the point of the stiletto.

"You are in some way involved in that arbitrary and absurd condition named in my father's will," I asserted, wildly.

Then suddenly I thought of the key question that I had planned to put to him; a question which would show him that I knew he had given me a false warning when he said that Felipa was not the woman I sought.

"Are you aware," I asked, "that I have seen the sign of the cross?"

To my joy, the question produced exactly the effect I had hoped it would. He sprang to his feet as if in alarm.

"Say that again," he commanded, peremptorily.

"I have seen the sign of the cross. Where is Felipa? I saw her standing in your doorway a moment ago."

"If you have seen the sign of the cross," he replied soothingly, even sadly, I thought, "then go in and win. You will find Felipa at the house of the Senor del Treveno. I repeat, go in and win."

Desperate Desmond

NO HELP IN SIGHT FOR YOUR LOVER, HA, HA, HA!
WOOF!
YOU CUR!
FAREWELL ROSAMOND, AND I CURSE YOU DESMOND!
NOW FOR A NEAT TURN
GREAT PANSIES! THAT'S GRAHAME-WHITE IN HIS AIRSHIP. HE WILL BE DASHED TO DEATH ON THESE ROCKS TRYING TO SAVE ME!
I'LL SEND A WIRELESS ALSO TO PUT THE POLICE ON DESMOND'S TRACK
WOOF, WOOF!
'TIS DESMONDS WORK, SIR!
CURSES! IT'S A POLICE AIRSHIP BUT MY TRUSTY 90 HORSE POWER AUTO WILL DO SOME DAMAGE!
WATCH THIS FOLDING AEROPLANE
YOU'RE PINCHED DESMOND!
POLICE PATROL
I'M FOILED!
NO. 6
ONE FOOT HIGHER SIR AND I'LL SEND THIS WOMAN TO ETERNITY HA HA HA
HORRORS! I'M STILL POWERLESS TO HELP MY ROSAMOND!

As we go to press, Desperate Desmond is speeding in his 90-horse power automobile, with Rosamond by his side, while Claude Eclaire is left to languish alone by the edge of the chasm. Did we say alone? That is not strictly accurate, for he has a mountain lion to keep him company.

The beast is inclined to be sociable, but Claude doesn't care to mingle with mountain lions. He doesn't like their table manners. And whom have we here? As we live, 'tis Grahame-White in his aeroplane. Can he save Claude from the lion's claws? Well, he'll do his level best, anyhow.

Clever guy, that Grahame-White! You've got to hand it to him, even if he does wear a 2-m dash in the middle of his name. He can't take Claude away from there, but he does the next best thing. The mountain lion is about to take his first ride in an aeroplane. Have you had yours yet?

You didn't know the Police Department had an aeroplane squad, did you? And yet, no doubt, you've often been told that the police were up in the air. How do you suppose they got there? Be that as it may, Desmond thinks he can wreck the police aeroplane. Maybe he can, and then again——

Maybe he can't. You see, the police aeroplanes are equipped with folding wings with hooks on their outer edges, and are particularly adapted for picking up speeding automobiles. They are not in common use as yet, but it won't be long before you'll see them every day. We have inside information.

That cur, Desmond, has no chivalry in his soul. He'll stick at nothing to save his own miserable life. He threatens to throw Rosamond out of the machine. What a terrible situation for a heroine to be in! And the worst of it is that we've got to leave her there until to-morrow, when the next picture appears.

Head Work Will Win

By ADA PATTERSON

ONE evening a stout man, with an air of prosperity, and an extension smile, hunted up the Newsboys' Home in New York city. He said he was still one of "de kids," though it had been thirty years since he had been growing up from an eastern newsboy to a western banker.

"You look just the same as you did thirty years ago," said Barney O'Neill, as he let out the extension smile. The boys cheered the smile and the big man behind it. "I intend to sleep under the old roof and in the old bunk, if I can find it," he added, and the boys roared with delight.

"Three cheers for de big kid!" shrieked the boys and Banker O'Neill bowed. Then the smile settled into a straight, practical line. "This is the advice I want to give you. Whatever happens use your head, and you'll succeed."

"De kids" cheered and promised. It was good advice. If it were always followed many hard places would be avoided, the road upward which we call success would be far easier.

In every crisis of life it is well to call on the head, by which we mean its chief tenant, the brain, as adviser. When we start down town in the morning to business we would do well to take our intelligence with us and leave our emotions behind. Business is battle, and for battle we need armor. The light of intelligence is an armor. Business has many dark, or at least shadowy, corners. Intelligence is a light that penetrates the shadows.

The advice to "use your head" is especially needed by women in business. Women carry their intelligence with them to their offices, but they carry besides, the excess baggage of the emotions. One of the cleverest women playwrights in this country when asked how she ever got on with those dreadfully obstinate managers, answered: "When I call on managers I leave my emotions in the hall."

When he advised "de kids" in their own vernacular to "Use their heads," Banker O'Neill counselled their taking the long view. He would have them look from each act far down the vista to its vanishing point. "Using your head" is sighting the perspective of every event, as one looks down a railroad track to the point where the two rails seem to meet.

The brain is mightier than the knuckles and a quiet going about one's business, more persuasive than any argument. The ultimate is more important than the immediate. When we use our heads we don't mistake one for the other.

Jails and asylums overflow with persons who used some other part of their anatomies besides their heads. The stomach reigned. Tumultuous, ungoverned feelings, which they called the heart, dominated. And up aloft that little flame that is given us to light our way fluttered fitfully and went out. It is because we don't use them properly that we "lose our heads."

Sometimes we hear expressed the fear that "using the head" too often will cause the emotions to atrophy. There is no need to fear this, far more danger of losing the head too often than of useing the head too much.

The affections and emotions are primitive. They are born at our birth. They linger with us through life's walk. Intelligence is acquired, and always does unequal battle against the native forces. Every daily newspaper spreads before us evidences of the force of the primitive instincts, drawing great men into tangents far from the orbit of routine and duty; of great women plunging meteorlike into eclipse and nothingness.

We need not fear over use of the head. Its under use is what keeps the millenium afar off.

The Head Waitress

She Hears All About Pretty Polly Perkins

By Hank

"PRETTY POLLY PERKINS, I love you. Hair of brown and cheek of down and eyes of blue," sang the Steady Customer to himself as he looked over the bill of fare in the Cafe des Enfants.

"What's that, a new song?" asked the Head Waitress, as she brushed a few stray crumbs from the marble-topped table.

"It must be new," replied the Steady Customer. "I only composed it last night."

"You composed it?" exclaimed the Head Waitress in surprise; "I didn't know you was one of them song writers."

"Well, I'm not," replied the Steady Customer, "that is to say, song writing isn't my profession, but any man with red blood in him becomes a writer of songs when he meets a pretty girl, especially when she has a cute name like Polly Perkins."

"Ain't youse a married man?" asked the Head Waitress, suspiciously.

"Erwell, yes, I'm married," admitted the Steady Customer, "but that doesn't prevent a man from having a platonic affinity, does it?"

"Platonic affinity," echoed the Head Waitress. "Chee! Where did you get that title?"

"It isn't original with me," said the Steady Customer, "but it's a good one, and I like it."

A Waltz Inspiration

"Well, who's your platonic affinity?" asked the Head Waitress.

"She's a very nice, sweet girl," the Steady Customer told her, "and she's engaged to my brother-in-law."

"That's a great name for a poet guy—Polly," suggested the Head Waitress. "I suppose your brother-in-law writes reams of it to her."

"No," answered the Steady Customer, "I regret to say that he doesn't, and I think he is throwing away a peach of an opportunity. Now, on the way home in the train last night, I composed a poem to Polly to go to waltz music, and I think it's great. You heard me humming it just now."

"I only heard a part of it," said the Head Waitress. "Sing it again."

"All right," said the Steady Customer, and after gulping down some coffee he started like this:

"Pretty Polly Perkins,
I love you—

Steady Customer [illegible] Over Polly Perkins to Head Waitress.

Her hair is brown, her cheeks are down,
Her eyes are blue.
No other girl looks good to me,
And morning, noon and night
I can't think of Dolly, but only sweet Polly,
For she's all right."

How's that?" asked the Steady Customer.

"Very good," said the Head Waitress, "but who's Dolly?"

"There's isn't any," replied the Steady Customer. "I just put in Dolly to rhyme with Polly, see?"

"Yes, I see," said the Head Waitress, "but there's another thing in the song I don't understand. What do you mean by saying her cheeks are 'down.'"

"Why you know what 'down' is," said the Steady Customer. "It's that soft stuff they put in pillows. Well, Dolly's cheeks are soft, and"——

"How do you know?" asked the Head Waitress.

"Well—er—I don't know," stammered the Steady Customer, "but they looked soft, very soft."

"Hugh," sniffed the Head Waitress, suspiciously, "you must have been sizing her up pretty hard. And she has blue eyes and brown hair?"

"Her hair is brown, but her eyes aren't blue," said the Steady Customer. "I just made them blue in the song so as to rhyme with 'you.'"

"Well, of all the poetizers I ever heard of, you are the worst," said the Head Waitress. "If any guy ever writes me a poem like that, I'll give him the mitt so quick he won't know what struck him. I won't have no one taking poetic liberties with my name."

"What is your name?" asked the Steady Customer, rising as he swallowed his last butter cake.

"Madge," the Head Waitress told him.

"Ha, ha," laughed the Steady Customer, "what chance do you stand to have any one write poems about you. Did you ever hear of a rhyme for Madge?"

"Outside of that it's a perfectly good name," the Head Waitress called after him. "And as for your new affinity, I pity her. She'll get trampled in the mob."

And the Steady Customer fled.

MEXICAN DISPOSAL OF DEAD

A CUSTOM that must seem very strange to many of us is the method of disposing of the dead which obtains in Mexican, Filipino and other Roman Catholic Spanish cemeteries. The bodies are not deposited in the ground, but in niches in a wall, the openings being then sealed with stone slabs lettered with the names of the deceased. These niches are let by the church at a yearly fee, and the body reposes peacefully therein so long as the rent is paid. When it ceases to be paid, however, the remains are ousted for non-payment. The bodies which are "evicted" for non-payment of sepulchre rent are turned into mummies by the mild, dry climate of that region. These mummified bodies are kept for a year, and if at the end of that time the relatives of the deceased have not paid another year's rent to reinstate the corpse, the remains are thrown unceremoniously into a great underground vault fifty feet deep and about three hundred feet in length.—Wide World Magazine.

Life's Hope

I KNOW that when the dawn creeps o'er the sky
And wings her tender shafts far out to sea,
Each silver streak becomes a bridge whereby
I cross to thee.
I know that when th' impassioned Sun pours down
His jewelled rays upon the quivering lea,
No gem too royal find I for the crown
I make for thee.
I know that when the twilight calls to rest,
And the Sun, dying, sinks upon the sea,
So shall I find at last, on thy dear breast
Eternity.

NEW ARABIAN NIGHTS

The Bohemian Adventures of Prince Florizel

By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON

THE SUICIDE CLUB.

Story of the Physician and the Saratoga Trunk. In Six Instalments.

Second Instalment

THE name of prince struck gratefully on Silas's republican hearing, and the aspect of the person to whom that name was applied exercised its usual charm upon his mind. He left Mme. Zephyrine and her Englishman to take care of each other and, threading his way through the assembly, approached the tables which the prince and his confidant had honored with their choice.

"I tell you, Geraldine," the former was saying, "the action is madness. Yourself (I am glad to remember it) chose your brother for this perilous service, and you are bound in duty to have a guard upon his conduct. He has consented to delay so many days in Paris; that was already an imprudence, considering the character of the man he has to deal with; but now when he is within eight and forty hours of his departure, when he is within two or three days of the decisive trial, I ask you, is this a place for him to spend his time? He should be in a gallery at practice, he should be sleeping long hours and taking moderate exercise on foot; he should be on a rigorous diet, without white wines or brandy. Does the dog imagine we are all playing comedy? The thing is deadly earnest, Geraldine."

"I know the lad too well to interfere," replied Colonel Geraldine, "and well enough not to be alarmed. He is more cautious than you fancy, and of an indomitable spirit. If it had been a woman I should not say so much, but I trust the president to him and the two valets without an instant's apprehension."

"I am gratified to hear you say so," replied the prince; "but my mind is not at rest. These servants are well-trained spies, and already has not this miscreant succeeded three times in eluding their observation and spending several hours on end in private, and most likely dangerous affairs? An amateur might have lost him by accident, but if Rudolph and Jerome were thrown off the scent, it must have been done on purpose, and by a man who had a cogent reason and exceptional resources."

"I believe the question is now one between my brother and myself," replied Geraldine, with a shade of offence in his tone.

"I permit it to be so, Colonel Geraldine," returned Prince Florizel. "Perhaps for that very reason you should be all the more ready to accept my counsels. But enough. That girl in yellow dances well."

And the talk veered into the ordinary topics of a Paris ballroom in the Carnival.

Silas remembered where he was, and that the hour was already near at hand when he ought to be upon the scene of his assignation. The more he reflected the less he liked the prospect, and as at that moment an eddy in the crowd began to draw him in the direction of the door, he suffered it to carry him away without resistance.

The eddy stranded him in a corner under the gallery, where his ear was immediately struck with the voice of Madame Zephyrine. She was speaking in French with the young man of the blond locks who had been pointed out by the strange Britisher not half an hour before.

"I have a character at stake," she said, "or I would put no other condition than my heart recommends. But you have only to say so much to the porter, and he will let you go by without a word."

"But why this talk of debt?" objected her companion.

"Heavens!" said she, "do you think I do not understand my own hotel?"

And she went by, clinging affectionately to her companion's arm.

This put Silas in mind of his billet.

"Ten minutes hence," thought he, "and I may be walking with as beautiful a woman as that, and even better dressed—perhaps a real lady, possibly a woman of title."

And then he remembered the spelling, and was a little downcast.

"But it may have been written by her maid," he imagined.

The clock was only a few minutes from the hour, and this immediate proximity set his heart beating at curious and rather disagreeable speed. He reflected with relief that he was in no way bound to put in an appearance. Virtue and cowardice were together, and he made once more for the door, but this time of his own accord, and battling against the stream of people which was now moving in a contrary direction.

Perhaps this prolonged resistance wearing him, or perhaps he was in that frame of mind when merely to continue in the same determination for a certain number of minutes produces a reaction and a different purpose. Certainly, at least, he wheeled about for a third time and did not stop until he had found a place of concealment within a few yards of the appointed place.

Here he went through an agony of spirit, in which he several times prayed to God for help, for Silas had been devoutly educated. He had now not the least inclination for the meeting; nothing kept him from flight but a silly fear lest he should be thought unmanly; but this was so powerful that it kept head against all other motives; and although it could not decide him to advance, prevented him from definitely running away.

At last the clock indicated ten minutes past the hour. Young Scuddamore's spirit began to rise; he peered round the corner and saw no one at the place of meeting; doubtless his unknown correspondent had wearied and gone away. He became as bold as he had formerly been timid. It seemed to him that if he came at all to the appointment, however late, he was clear from the charge of cowardice. Nay, now he began to suspect a hoax, and actually complimented himself on his shrewdness in having suspected and outmanoeuvred his mystifiers. So very idle a thing is a boy's mind!

Silas Declares His Love

Armed with these reflections, he advanced boldly from his corner; but he had not taken above a couple of steps before a hand was laid upon his arm. He turned and beheld a lady cast in a very large mould and with somewhat stately features, but bearing no mark of severity in her looks.

"I see that you are a very self-confident lady-killer," said she; "for you make yourself expected. But I was determined to meet you. When a woman has once so far forgotten herself as to make the first advance, she has long ago left behind her all consideration of petty pride."

Silas was overwhelmed by the size and attractions of his correspondent and the suddenness with which she had fallen upon him. But she soon set him at his ease. She was very towardly and lenient in her behavior; she led him on to make pleasantries, and then applauded him to the echo; and in a very short time, between blandishments and a liberal exhibition of warm brandy, she had not only induced him to fancy himself in love, but to declare his passion with the greatest vehemence.

"Alas!" she said, "I do not know whether I ought not to deplore this moment, great as is the pleasure you give me by your words. Hitherto I was alone to suffer; now, poor boy, there will be two. I am not my own mistress. I dare not ask you to visit me at my own house, for I am watched by jealous eyes. Let me see," she added; "I am older than you, although so much weaker; and while I trust in your courage and determination, I must employ my own knowledge of the world for our mutual benefit. Where do you live?"

He told her that he lodged in a furnished hotel, and named the street and number.

She seemed to reflect for some minutes, with an effort of mind.

"I see," she said at last. "You will be faithful and obedient, will you not?"

Silas assured her eagerly of his fidelity.

"To-morrow night, then," she continued, with an encouraging smile, "you must remain at home all the evening; and if any friends should visit you, dismiss them at once on any pretext that most readily presents itself. Your door is probably shut by ten?" she asked.

"By eleven," answered Silas.

"At a quarter past eleven," pursued the lady, "leave the house. Merely cry for the door to be opened, and be sure you fall into no talk with the porter, as that might ruin everything. Go straight to the corner where the Luxembourg Gardens join the boulevard; there you will find me waiting you. I trust you to follow my advice from point to point; and remember, if you fail me in any one particular, you will bring the sharpest trouble on a woman whose only fault is to have loved you."

"I cannot see the use of all these instructions," said Silas.

FRECKLES

November Worst Month for This Trouble—How to Remove Easily.

There's a reason why nearly everybody is freckled by the winds of Autumn, but happily there is also a cure for those ugly blemishes, and no one need stay freckled.

Simply get one ounce of Othine—double strength from Houghton & Dutton, or Riker-Jaynes Drug Co.—and apply a little of it at night, and in the morning you will see that even the worst have begun to disappear, while the light ones have vanished entirely. Now is the time to rid yourself of freckles; for if not removed now they will stay all Winter and spoil an otherwise beautiful complexion. Be sure to ask for the double strength Othine, as it is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove the freckles.

$2,000 CONTEST IS STILL OPEN

The BOSTON AMERICAN, in announcing a few weeks ago the beginning of the Educational Contest, had no conception of the astonishing popularity which the enterprise has already achieved.

The plan of giving to the boys and girls in New England a little regular mental exercise, took like the measles, and everybody that got a glimpse of the announcement at the start began solving the pictures. Every succeeding day there have been hundreds of inquiries—and the number is increasing daily—showing that a great number of new contestants are entering the competition of wits.

The announcement that newly enrolled contestants could obtain back pictures by writing to the Educational Contest Director, in the event of the newsdealer being sold out, brought on another rush of new contestants.

The publication of the picture catalogue, which contains all the names of the pictures represented in the contest, was also greeted with an astonishing popular demand.

Enter Any Time.

Any one can enter at any time, excepting only employes of the AMERICAN and their families. Any one entering now has as good a chance of winning a prize as one who started when the first picture was published.

There is no obligation to be assumed by the contestant.

You do not have to be nominated. You are a contestant as soon as your enrollment blank is received by the AMERICAN.

Read over the conditions printed on another page of the AMERICAN today.

If you are just starting in this contest, clip out and promptly fill in the enrollment blank, which you will find in today's AMERICAN. Send to the Educational Contest Director, BOSTON AMERICAN, for the preceding pictures already published. Before sending for these pictures, try to get the back copies from your newsdealer.

Probably you will like to have one of the handy little picture catalogues which are in such demand. The catalogues are going out in great numbers, from the Educational Contest Department.

You can have one by mailing 10c in stamps. They are particularly helpful, in that the contestant knows that the correct answers of the cities, towns, rivers, or whatever each picture represents, are contained in the catalogue. He or she can thus go through the catalogue and select the city, town, river, or whatever seems most applicable to the picture of the day.

$2,000 In Cash Prizes.

New contestants who have not seen all that is printed about this contest, are at liberty to write to the Educational Contest Director, BOSTON AMERICAN, any questions regarding the conditions and prizes. These questions cannot be answered direct, but will be replied to through the columns of the AMERICAN, Daily and Sunday.

In sending questions, please be brief as possible, and be sure that the thing that puzzles you is not fully explained in the conditions before you write.

Two thousand dollars in cash prizes for the winners. It is certainly a pretty rich prize list.

ENTER IT TO-DAY.

WATT INVESTIGATES RAISING OF PURITAN

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—In order to investigate the question of raising the monitor Puritan, which lies in the mud of Hampton Roads as a result of the experiments with nitro-glycerine gelatine, Admiral Richard M. Watt, chief constructor of the navy, has gone to Norfolk. Admiral Watt will attempt to find out whether the facilities of the government are equal to the task or whether it will be necessary to call upon a wrecking company to perform it. The latter, it is said, in all probability will be the outcome.

ELOPEMENT MYSTERY CLEARED BY WEDDING

WILMINTON, Del., Nov. 21.—The cause of the disappearance of four prominent young people from Baltimore in an automobile was solved here when two of the party were married by the Rev. Dr. George L. Wolfe. The elopers were Miss Ruth F. Morgan, twenty-one, and Roger W. Williamson, twenty-three. Both are wealthy, the young groom being associated with his father in the ownership of the Williamson Veneer Company of Baltimore.

RALPH JOHNSTONE BURIED.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Nov. 21.—Wilbur Wright and Walter Brookins attended the funeral at Trinity Church here of Ralph Johnstone, the darging Wright aviator, who plunged to death during a spectacular flight at Denver Thursday. The services were attended by many who knew the aviator in life.

PUTS FOUR GOLF BALLS IN MOUTH

Putting the ball in a hole is a very essential part of golf, but when that hole is in the human face of course the feat is apart from the great and ancient Scottish game. Still all golf players in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, not to mention the United States, where there are more, it is said, than in any other country, are vastly interested in the feat of Edward Ford, an Australian comedian now showing in London. He is gifted with a very flexible countenance. He can execute extraordinary facial contortions and has illustrated his capacity in this regard by a feat said to be without parallel. To put one golf ball in the mouth is not only difficult for most persons, but fraught with some danger. Ford recently made a bet with Harry Tate, a well known London artist, that he could not put two balls in his mouth at a time and after the sketch drawer had tried and failed, the vaudeville performer simply amazed spectators by putting four in his own. Then he was photographed!

PRELATE URGES FEDERATION

Archbishop O'Connell declared at a mass meeting of 2,000 Catholic men from all the parishes in Cambridge, at St. Peter's Hall in that city, under the auspices of the Middlesex County branch of the Catholic Federation, that the organization was a necessity in the present condition of Catholicity in this country.

Monsgnor Moriarty, pastor of St. Peter's Church, was the chairman, and in his opening address traced the history of the diocese from the days of Bishop Cheverus and Bishop Fenwick to the present day.

The Rev. Ambrose L. Roche of Watertown, chaplain of the Middlesex County branch, spoke of the early days of the federation and the vast undertaking it was.

In closing Fr. Roche paid a glowing tribute to the archbishop, saying in part: "But to-night it is my privilege to speak plainly, and to tell you, archbishop, that your priests and your people admire and love you. That no other archbishop in the world deserves or possesses more affection and reverence from the clergymen and the laity of the diocese."

Clergy and Laity.

Archbishop O'Connell said in part:

"It is usually a question of saying the formal words, 'It gives me great pleasure to be with you to-night.' What is there distinctive that makes this wonderful affection between the pastor and his people, so intimate, so strong, that on every occasion, whatever may be its object or purpose, whenever a true Catholic can, he always wants to say some words of affection and love or approbation or confidence to those whom God has placed over him?

"Far be it from me to assume any false modesty on such occasions as this one by saying another formality as such words as 'Of course I know it is not for me.' I think you know very well that all of us priests and bishops understand that perfectly well without saying it.

"But to behold a body of men of this number and character, stimulated and enthused with Catholic spirit, which after all is the spirit of the regime of the Catholic faith, the spirit of loyalty to their chief, why the very thoughts are so essential we cannot do without them and therefore we embrace them, and we often times long for them.

Unity the Watchword.

"Unity of men, that is the whole idea of federation. The danger to-day is that the wolf, vigilant and watchful and constantly on guard seeing where he can enter the fold and destroy it, is on all sides doing only one thing where he can, and at least attempting it even if he does not succeed, and that is a division of our Catholic people and the division between the people and their priests.

"If they only can succeed even in a small degree in this destructive disintegration, disunion of Catholic societies, the rest is very easily accomplished, and therefore the very first thought underlying the principle of this federation in my mind is that we are working quite independent of any federations in the United States.

"And this diocese has taken up this movement and I have adopted it myself, fully persuaded that in this diocese at least it has become necessary, and it has become a diocese federation quite independent of whether other parts of the country take it up. It has been the experience of those who have gone before us there was only one need, which is the same to-night, and that is to unite and unite strongly, loyally and faithfully."

WEBSTER'S ANSWERS THE PUBLIC NEED

The best book of its kind in existence is Webster's Dictionary. It is the standard work wherever the English language is spoken. Everybody needs a dictionary and the one which will answer the public need the best is this one. A copy can be obtained by a reader by clipping a coupon for seven consecutive days from the Daily and Sunday AMERICAN, and paying thirty-five, sixty-five or ninety-five cents, according to the character of the binding selected. This dictionary is of such educational value that every parent should see that the children have one.

ENGLISH MANSION DESTROYED BY FIRE

LONDON, Nov. 21.—Lees Court, at Faversham, Kent, the ancestral home of the Earl of Sondes, with its priceless contents, has been destroyed by fire. The damage is estimated at $500,000, but no intrinsic value could be placed on many of the treasures with which the house was filled. Lees Court was occupied by Reginald D. Halsey Laye, and a house party awakened by the smoke and flames, escaped from the building scantily clad. Prince Henry of Prussia recently was a guest at the court.

FITZGERALD MAKES CHARGES AGAINST BOSTN NEWSPAPERS

"If I try to tell some truths about certain conditions and certain people, I immediately become the target for abuse. Why, there are some editors in Boston who, if they were to say a good word for me to-day, would be discharged by their papers to-morrow morning."

This is a statement made by Mayor Fitzgerald. What does he mean? What newspaper in Boston would discharge an editor for telling the truth?

OUT WITH THE NAMES, MR. MAYOR!

DINNER TO-NIGHT IN HONOR OF ELDER

Judges of the various courts in Boston, with a number of prominent attorneys, have accepted invitations to attend a reception and dinner at the Boston City Club to-night, in honor of Hon. Samuel J. Elder, who appeared before the Hague tribunal recently to argue the cause of the United States in its fisheries dispute with Canada. Hon. Richard Olney will preside at the reception, and Melvin O. Adams will be the toastmaster at dinner.

FIVE GOLFERS TREED BY BULL

WENHAM, Nov. 21.—Attracted by a red jersey a bull chased and treed five Sunday players on the Wenham links. In the race for the tree one of the golfers fell in a brook and had to be fished out by his companions.

The five who climbed an apple tree, making the hastiest ascent in their lives, were Chester Pepper, Chester Ward, E. A. Snow and F. H. Squires, all of Beverly, and Carl Anderson of Boston. The climb was preceded by a fifty-yard dash.

The golfers saw the bull dashing toward them down a gradual incline when the animal was an eighth of a mile away. They immediately grew scared, and as the bull increased his speed they dashed for the tree.

It was necessary to cross a small ditch on the way to the tree, and Pepper fell into this. Anderson, who was just about to climb the tree, seeing his predicament, pulled Pepper out of the mud.

Pepper was pulled up onto the lower limb of the tree when the bull was scarcely twenty feet away. For fifteen minutes the bull looked up at the red jersey, trying in vain to climb the tree. The golfers, after they recovered their breath, screamed at the top of their lungs.

A groundkeeper was attracted by their cries. He summoned Mr. Batchelder, who, with two hired men armed with pitchforks, drove the Holstein back to the barn.

STATE ST. NEWS FOR INVESTORS

The managements of the railroads are learning many new things as they go along, and one of these is the benefit that would accrue to them by cultivating more cordial relations with the public at large.

$ $ $

One fact which forces itself on public attention is the failure of money to run up to high rates as leading bankers have said it would. These bankers do not seem to realize that their own fears made high money impossible, for they prepared for just such an event.

$ $ $

It is reported that several very large bond issues are now being arranged, and it is believed that these will surely be followed by heavy orders for steel rails and equipment. The situation in this respect has taken an unexpectedly hopeful turn.

$ $ $

A great deal of money is being offered by Europe to American bankers, whereas two weeks ago the statement was made in London that no such advance would be made this Winter, but London has taken a more friendly attitude toward American finances and toward its market for securities.

$ $ $

Those who stand on the firing line on the Stock Exchange, where they can strike hands with their opponents, say the bull forces are still in full control of the market. They expect to see the Coalers, Steel common and Union Pacific continue in leadership this week, and cotton is expected to join in a bullish demonstration after the ginning report is made public this morning.

$ $ $

Bank clearances show only a small falling off this week from last year, and a very large proportion of this is in New York City, where there has been a very dull market as compared with a very active one a year ago. This time last year the market was boiling in Wall Street, and it is possible that the entire shrinkage in the country may be accounted for by the difference of the activity of the market, for the West was also active in stocks a year ago.

$ $ $

The balance of trade has turned definitely, as is proved by the figures for October. From now on exports of cotton will increase the balance in favor of the United States because cotton is going abroad in greater volume and at continuously rising prices. From September 1 to January 1 the exports of American cotton this year will exceed in value $300,000,000. Oats were marketed at a high price and so was wheat. Corn has not come on to the market in large volume yet. The country has been under a crop-moving strain of unusual size, but even that strain has not made money tight.

$ $ $

What the various State Legislatures will do this Winter is the subject of much conjecture, but the prospects are that with the Minnesota rate case in mind local statesmen will not be in such a hurry to pass laws regulating railroad rates. They are apt to trespass upon the domain of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and as they have been warned to keep off the grass they may heed the admonition and attend purely to State matters.

$ $ $

An insider has the following to say of United States Steel: "The dividend of 5 per cent. will be maintained on United States Steel common, even if the present low rate of business continues till the end of the year, and even if it gets considerably worse in the first half of 1911. Officers of the company expect to see improvement of a material kind take place toward the middle of the coming year."

$ $ $

The upward movement in Chesapeake & Ohio is attracting a good deal of attention at this time as indicative of a Hawley policy of aggression. The progress of the stock was interrupted some months ago and the bears succeeded in putting it down to 65, but since then it has gone ahead steadily and it bids fair to pass its previous record. Some are talking of par.

$ $ $

The main feature of the campaign in Smelting is its conservatism. The last one was more spectacular, but after the issue had been put above par it failed to hold. The probabilities seem to be in favor of an addition to the dividend within a short time, as the company is doing an enlarged business. It is making enough, the insiders say, to pay at least 6 per cent. per annum.

$ $ $

Many of the industrial specialties have become strong of late, and it is apparent that the pools in these stocks propose to do something with them. The rise in Pump has been taken as a reflection of the current bullishness of the Guggenheim interests in all their securities, but the buying in this issue is confined to a few people and is not at all general.

$ $ $

Declaration of another annual dividend of 2 per cent. by the Colorado & Southern proves that the directors are still committed to a policy of conservation, for the annual report recently issued showed a balance equivalent to 7 per cent. for the common stock. After paying half the deficit of its two subsidiary roads and dividends on its three classes of stock there was a balance of $1,118,708, equal to nearly 4 per cent. on the common.

$ $

Quincy A. Shaw, president of the Calumet & Hecla Mining Company, asked regarding the rumors of a merger of the Lake properties and general copper consolidation, said: "I know nothing at all of any such programme, and can't imagine where the report started." Mr. Shaw said he knew of no special reason for the recent advance in Calumet & Hecla stock.

STOCKS SHOW SHARP DECLINE

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—Despite the favorable bank statement issued before the close on Saturday the stock market opened quiet to-day with most of the stocks quoting losses running from fractions to a point and more. Absence of buying was another reason for to-day's sharp decline.

Union Pacific and Canadian Pacific were the heaviest losers in the early trading. The former stock opened at 178⅛ and later quoted 178. Canadian Pacific took a decided slump, dropping from 196¼ to 194⅞.

Steel common which closed on Saturday at 81⅝ opened to-day at 80⅞ and fell back to 80¾. During the next twenty minutes a sharp rally in this stock boosted the price to 81. Reading during the early trading was quoting a loss of ⅝, but later recovered almost all of this loss. The copper stocks opened lower.

Americans, during the late trading on the London Exchange were quoting losses of from ¼ to ¾. The present political situation in England was in a great measure the cause for the drop in prices.

Pianos and Musical Instruments.

SACRIFICE PIANO SALE
$5 Down $1 A Week

A Piano Sale here is always a sacrifice, always a bargain sale, always a mark-down sale. The very nature of business, as the public knows, is one of sacrifice. The business here is not conducted like the business of a regular Piano store down town, where they are expected to make a profit on each piano—where they get their profit DIRECTLY out of the sale of pianos. We don't let any piano loaf around on the floor of the Roxbury Storage Salesrooms—it comes to the Storage Salesrooms in DUE TIME, a sacrifice tag is clapped on to it, be it high grade, low grade or middle grade, and it is sold to the first man or woman who wants it for the price marked on the tag—not a cent more or less. The selling price is made on the Roxbury Storage Salesrooms' "Expense percentage" basis and is figured to let the accounts out clean and clear without regard to profit—so you can see easily by this statement how these sales must necessarily be sacrifices.

Delivered free anywhere in unmarked wagons.

A FEW PEOPLE DON'T USE AMERICAN WANT ADS

For the same reason that modern methods were once scoffed at by our forefathers, yet, in spite of prejudice, progress has its way. The successful majority employ the "WANT AD WAY" to secure tenants, or buyers, or help, or employment. They employ the AMERICAN, realizing that it is the only paper which will carry their message to nearly all of the people.

The Other Side of the Trust Question

The Trust Evil Will NOT Be Remedied by Returning to the Old Plan of Indiscriminate Competition, Wasteful and Often Dishonest

Copyright, 1910, by American-Journal-Examiner

We have told you something of the life history of ONE trust—the combination that put up the price of window glass 70 per cent. in one year, and that now reduces the wages of workmen from 30 to 55 per cent., because the government has dissolved the trust.

Trusts increase prices, diminish output by making charges exorbitant, and in so doing reduce the demand for labor.

You will ask if there is any other side to the trust question. There is. Our industrial difficulties and problems will not be solved by doing away with big organizations and going back to competition among small people.

There IS another side to this trust question—and the problem of industry will not be solved by returning to the old, abandoned, brutal, defective and often dishonest competitive system.

It would be infinitely better to have all of the glass companies combined and working together—if they would work and combine honestly—giving to the public and to workmen their proper share of the benefits and economies of combination.

It is a fact that under the combination the workmen were paid somewhat better than they were paid before the trust was organized. But fewer men were employed. Wages were raised 12 per cent. by the trust, while prices were raised 70 per cent. and dividends paid of 400 per cent. The dissolution of the trust is followed by reduction in wages of 30 to 55 per cent.—far lower than they were before—yet it is nevertheless a fact THAT ORGANIZATION AND COMBINATION COULD INCREASE WAGES GREATLY WITHOUT INCREASING PRICES OR ABOLISHING FAIR PROFIT.

To have a lot of men competing with each other, manufacturing too much at one time, regardless of the market, and not enough at another time, is wasteful.

To have different men in different places producing goods, and trying to see which can pay the lowest wages—thus cutting prices in competition—is not a good thing for workingmen or the public.

It would be far better to have INTELLIGENT combination, controlled by the people themselves, through just laws, faithfully observed, while we are waiting for the coming days of public ownership, when the people will more and more widely own sources of wealth, and big men, in the industry of the future, as in the army of to-day, will work for glory and applause, rather than cash profit.

Nothing could be more admirable than a great industry, splendidly organized, with expensive competition, disastrous wage-cutting and inferior quality eliminated—and with the public getting the benefit and economy of organization.

Nothing, on the other hand, would be more dangerous in a republic, more dishonest and menacing, than the actual management of trusts, the reckless increase in prices of all necessities, with no corresponding increase of pay for labor, or other effort, outside of the trust circle.

Nothing could be more intolerable than a few private individuals controlling the absolute necessities of life, through industries, manufactures, railroads and tariff, charging the masses of the people what they please, piling up fortunes, with which other trusts are created, legislatures debauched and public opinion largely controlled through dull or dishonest newspapers.

The trust problem—that is to say, the problem of organized industry and combination—is the great problem of to-day.

The competitive system on the one hand is dead, obsolete, wasteful. Humanity will never go back to that. To abolish a great industry and try to divide it up into a thousand small ones would be as foolish as the thought of abolishing a great locomotive and dividing it up into fifty or one hundred four-horse wagons.

The people must find some way of controlling the great organizations now, AND OWNING THEM EVENTUALLY.

Fair wages must be paid to the workmen for fair work. And fair wages must be paid the human intelligence that DIRECTS the work.

And at the same time the interests of the population must be protected by fair prices.

It is a very big problem. Feudal industry, organized money, controls the United States to-day, just as the nobility and an organized army controlled Europe a few centuries ago.

The fining and breaking up of one little trust is like hanging one of the old nobles when he made himself especially objectionable. It doesn't solve any real problem, although it sheds light on the greater or less intelligence of the voters, the selfishness of men of exceptional ability, the uprightness of judges, AND EMPHASIZES THE NECESSITY OF MAINTAINED AND INTELLIGENT INTEREST OF THE CITIZENS IN THEIR BALLOT.

This last must solve the industrial and financial problems of the United States—a great task.

LETTERS FROM AMERICAN READERS

RAPID TRANSIT

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

I want to write in behalf of hundreds of people, as well as myself, of the injustice and delay occasioned to us who use the cars running over the bridges from Chelsea to Boston. Isn't there a law prohibiting the tender from allowing more than one vessel at a time? Frequently we have been obliged to wait for two, thereby losing our chance for getting to our work in time, a minute meaning an hour's loss. I wish you would kindly write up this most distressing annoyance, asking all working men who have occasion to use the road their opinion. I am sure with your valuable assistance something ought to be the outcome. You have started so many good things from which the results have been so satisfactory, won't you give us workmen a little of your enterprising interest in this matter? We are often held up fifteen or twenty minutes. To some that means a lot, to myself it means forty-five cents every time. Figure that out at the rate of perhaps three or four hundred men. Why can't something be done to keep those draws closed between certain hours in the morning, say six to eight, and give us a chance to get to our work?

Many times cars are lined up from the bridge to the square in Chelsea. Not only myself, but hundreds of men will thank you if you will give us your support and encouragement, as the AMERICAN is the paper of the working man.

SUFFRAGE AND POLYGAMY

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

A correspondent signing himself A. L. M. writes that woman suffrage has strengthened polygamy in Utah.

The late Mrs. Julia Ward Howe sent a letter of inquiry as to the practical working of equal suffrage to all the Episcopal, Presbyterian, Congregational, Methodist, and Baptist clergymen in the four equal suffrage States; also to the Congregational Sunday school superintendents, and to the editors of the newspapers.

The Woman's Journal of October 15, says of the replies from the ministers, "The answers have just been tabulated. From Wyoming, where women have had the full ballot for forty-one years, to Idaho, where they have had it for only fourteen, all four of the enfranchised States give an overwhelming majority of favorable answers. The replies from Utah were awaited with some misgivings, because of the peculiar conditions existing there; but the Christian ministers of Utah seem to be as generally convinced as those of the other States that equal suffrage is all right."

Since the Christian ministers of Utah are satisfied that woman suffrage there has been beneficial, I think we may rest assured that the charge is unfounded.

Altogether, in Mrs. Howe's census, 624 answers were received. Of these, 62 were opposed, 46 in doubt, and 516 in favor.

Very truly,
FLORENCE H. LUSCOMB.

A Plea for a Human Being

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

A Sanitarium, not a prison, is the place for such criminals as Jesse Pomeroy; constant moral and constructive occupation for their minds, not solitary confinement, should be given them, says noted writer.

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1910, by the American-Journal-Examiner

FORTY years ago a boy of fourteen was sent to prison for life.

This boy had committed crimes of incredible cruelty. He had tortured and killed two other children with fiendish deliberation; and he was declared unsafe to be abroad in the land. Only his youth saved him from capital punishment.

This boy, now a man fifty-five years old, still lives in the Charlestown State prison.

It is one of the best conducted and most human prisons in the world; but this man was sentenced to solitary confinement for life, and the prison authorities are unable to do otherwise than keep him in his cell.

The prisoner has made a plea for greater liberty. In this plea he says:

The Prisoner's Plea

I respectfully suggest that this prisoner may have some encouragement in doing well. He is no worse than his neighbors. Kindness is never lost on any one, and this prisoner has all his life shown himself responsive to kind treatment. Although I have made some errors here, I have never once been violent or dangerous. No officer has ever accused me of it.

To give me privileges the Governor will have to be consulted, as the sentence is still solitary, and the commissioners and warden have no authority to leave me beyond my cell. Whether my case can have your sympathy I do not know, still an effort to uplift this life would bring you pleasure, as it did Governor Gaston in 1875. His message to me (1888) was: "I am not sorry; I am glad I saved that boy's life." He would not sign my death warrant.

Public feeling against me is responsible for the deeply rooted and persistent misrepresentation all these years. Of course, it cannot be denied that the crime was dreadful and that public justice required satisfaction; but the truth is no effort has been made from that day to this to better this prisoner's condition.

I have no friends, no influence; I cannot get a hearing from the Governor. I have been left to my own device in this cell all these years.

Official Foolishness

Fifty years from now, our descendants will read with wonder and horror of such cruel punishment as this victim of a diseased mind has been subjected to.

It will seem incredible to them that men in power, holding responsible positions, could condemn a boy of fourteen to such a hopeless and dwarfing life as perpetual solitary confinement; and that after forty years he should plead vainly for a little freedom—the freedom of working outside his cell and speaking to his fellow men.

It would be just as humane, just as sensible, just as logical, to shut a child in a room for half a century in order that it might become well educated, as to shut a criminal up in a cell to make him reform.

The writer is not positive that the story related below is the story of this boy who was sentenced to a living death in Charlestown Prison. The impression is strong that it is his story, but at all events, it is the story of a boy abnormally criminal.

A Hereditary Clew

His father was a butcher and the mother of the boy was in the habit of taking her sewing and sitting with the father while he killed animals for market. During the months previous to the birth of her child she had so passed her afternoons. The little boy began to kill insects and torture animals as soon as he could walk, and he developed all the terrible tendencies which mark the born murderer.

He was tried and convicted and sent to prison for life before he reached the age of manhood.

A sanitarium, not a prison, is the place for such criminals. Constant moral and constructive occupation for their minds, not solitary confinement, should be given them.

The human brain is always changing; it is growing stronger or weaker, better or worse, as the mind is occupied with worthy and wholesome, or unworthy and vicious thoughts.

To place a criminally minded boy in solitary confinement, and compel him to dwell upon thoughts of evil done, is to help him to build a diseased mental structure.

Inconsistency

There is a sentence in Jesse Pomeroy's plea which is heartbreaking in its pathos, and should make every philanthropist, and reformer, and Christian in America blush with shame.

He says: "The truth is, since that day (1875), no effort has been made to better my condition."

Think of it, good people! And then go to church and pray for the heathen, and contribute a generous sum to their conversion.

Dr. Riley D. Moore said recently in the Swastika Magazine:

> The sanitarium, and not the prison, is the place to deal with a large per cent. of our criminals.
>
> The criminal insane, whose condition is caused by autotoxemia originating in the digestive organs, are sometimes treated in the hospital as they should be, but the victims of morphine poisoning or alcoholism must go to the penitentiary for their misdeeds.
>
> Let me make a criminal for you. We will use a pattern which has long ago become dirty and torn from constant use.
>
> We are told that in the days of Good Queen Bess the man who had no master was to be accounted a vagabond. How far have we advanced since that day? To-day we send a man to jail because he has no visible means of support other than his two hands.
>
> The man who is a slave to strong drink is worthy of much respect and more sympathy than the one held in bondage by tea, coffee or stimulating foods.
>
> More backbone and will power are required to overpower a strong master than a weak one.
>
> There are many other kinds of intoxication which are just as pernicious in their effects as alcohol.
>
> Crimes requiring secretiveness and great deception are often the delight of the opium eater. The moral decline so common in epileptics is due to the bromides used in the treatment of the disease rather than to the disease itself. Look at the crimes committed in the South by the poor fiends who are "full o' coke."
>
> Though often ignored by reformers, there are toxic products developed in the body that have just as far-reaching effects as other poisons. Criminal tendencies are no less liable to become manifest in the victim of auto-intoxication than in the one subjected to alcoholic or morphine poisoning. Laziness, the "mother of mischief," is nothing but auto-intoxication.
>
> Disturbances in the digestive tract, causing absorption of the products of decomposition and fermentation, sometimes result in serious intoxication.

Seek Prevention

Good people of America, of the world, instead of so much time and thought and money spent on punishment, and "conversion," why not turn your attention to methods of prevention and cure?

Agitate the subject of pre-natal influence and the teaching of girls and women (and boys and men as well) its mighty power in shaping the future of the child.

Agitate the subject of prison reform, and with pen, and word of mouth, try to bring the public mind to understand the crying shame of so much punishment, and the crying need of occupation for minds criminally inclined, and help to do away with this awful thing known as solitary confinement.

And give a strong mental push to the case of Jesse Pomeroy, who, after forty years, is seeking, not for freedom, not for pardon, but for the pitiful privilege of having some occupation outside of his silent cell—for the privilege of thinking about something besides his miserable, birthmarked past.

"MERCY," sed Ma wen Pa caim hoam the other nite, Wat is the matter with yure two lamps?

My two lamps is all rite, sed Pa, except that one (1) of them feels a littel narrower than the other. I will admit, Pa sed, that I was in a sort of a mix up, not a regular fite, but something of a muss, & I am willing to concede, Pa sed, that I didn't get all the best of it, though the other fellers knew that they had been in a hurricane.

I will tell how it all caim about, sed Pa. I was having a soshubal drink jest befoar dinner. You know, wife, Pa sed, I sumtimes have jest one beefore dinner, I forgit which. Anyhow, I met Major Dalton, wich is a good old Scotch frend of mine, and Mister Maguire, wich is also a frend of mine. It seems, sed Pa, that jest at the time I met them they was talking about poetry, Scotch & Irish poetry preferred, & Major Dalton was boostin; for Bobbie Burns & his frend was boosting for Tom Moore. They didn't give me a chanst for to git a word in edgeways, sed Pa. It was hammer and tongs between them, & they tried to make me the umpire but they wuddent let me talk. Do you think this man Burns ever wrote anything half so fine as Lally Rook? sed Mister Maguire, & wen I was jest going to say yes, he wud holler Shut up and let me talk. Then Major Dalton wud start talking about Bobbie Burns. Wife, sed Pa, did you evver hear a Scotchman pronounce the name Bobbie Burns? No, sed Ma. Well, sed Pa, wen a Scotchman pronounces that nalm, he always says it in a kind of whisper, as if he was saying his prayers. Even in this age of knocking, Pa sed, & I will admit that it is a knocking age, there is no living man that can say a word against Bobbie Burns if that man happens to be talking to a Scotchman.

But you haven't toald me about them black eyes of yures, & how you happened for to git them.

I am getting to that, sed Pa. I won't be vary long now, if you will have a littel pashens. All the time that the Major & Mister Maguire was talking they was gitting madder & madder, & thay was gitting neerer & neerer to me. The funny part of it was, Pa sed, that they kep me between them. Both of them is good, hard hitters, Pa sed, & I sort of felt that sooner or later one (1) of them wud lash out. As it happened, sed Pa, jest after Mister Maguire sed that Bobbie Burns was nothing but a farmer with a farmer's idees, sumthing happened. The Major swung, Pa sed, a terribul blow that wud have laid his frend coald if it had happened to lite on his map, but the blow nevver landed on Maguire. It landed on me, Pa sed. Then Mister Maguire countered, sed Pa, with his right hand. He is a littel old, Pa said, but he is still a good man, & his fist is bilt like the lower part of a tree, the part that cums to the surface wen a wind blows the tree oaver. The blow nevver reached the Major, as I blocked it with my face.

Dident it evver occur to you, sed Ma, that yure days mite be better spent in work & study than in hanging around a cafay trying to settel disputes between two litterary men? I have known you for many yeers, sed Ma, & I nevver knew you to win a argument eeven in favorabel surroundings. Why doant you sware off? sed Ma. I think I will, Pa sed. New Years is coming.
